

CANADIAN ELDER LAW CONFERENCE
NOVEMBER 13th, 2015

Vancouver, British Columbia

Legal Capacity to Marry, Co-Habit, Separate and Divorce and Predatory Marriages

Kimberly Whaley & Heather Hogan

Whaley Estate Litigation

www.whaleyestatelitigation.com

Contents

Contents	2
Capacity to Marry, Co-Habit, Separate, and Divorce.....	3
1. Introduction	3
2. What is Capacity?	5
3. Property Law/Testamentary Considerations	11
4. Capacity to Marry	14
(a) Statutory and Common law Requirements	15
(b) Predatory Marriages	18
(c) Equitable and Other Remedies to Set Aside a Predatory Marriage	24
5. Capacity to Co-Habit or Live Together	38
6. Capacity to Separate.....	43
7. Capacity to Divorce	46
(a) Setting Aside a Divorce Judgment.....	52
8. Role of the Attorney and Litigation Guardian	53
9. Concluding Comments.....	63

Capacity to Marry, Co-Habit, Separate, and Divorce

1. Introduction¹

Statistics confirm that our population is aging. In some individuals, age and longevity be associated with medical issues and other factors that affect cognitive ability. Medical issues include dementia in varying types and degrees, Alzheimer's, and other diseases or disorders conditions involving reduced functioning and capability.² There may also be many other factors that affect capacity and increase an individual's likelihood of being vulnerable, dependent and susceptible to influence. Factors such as mental illness, which is often untreated or undiagnosed, medical or pharmaceutical-related delusions, drug and alcohol abuse, and addiction can all have an impact on one's cognitive capacity.³ These medical issues and other factors unfortunately may serve as an opportunity for elder abuse and exploitation.

Elder abuse, including financial abuse, exploitation, and undue influence can occur in the context of marriage, co-habitation, separation, and even divorce. For example, civil marriages may be solemnized in circumstances where one party to the marriage is incapable of understanding, appreciating, and formulating a choice to marry, or of providing consent to marry—whether because of illness or dependency.⁴ Indeed, unscrupulous opportunists too often get away with preying upon in particular, older adults

¹ Authored by Kimberly A. Whaley, Principal of Whaley Estate Litigation

² Kimberly Whaley et. al, Capacity to Marry and the Estate Plan (Aurora: Canada Law Book, 2010) at 70.
<http://www.canadalawbook.ca>

³ Ibid.

⁴ Supra note 2.

with diminished reasoning ability purely for financial gain as a result of society's general reluctance to investigate the circumstances surrounding marriage. We refer to this type of exploitation through marriage as 'predatory marriages'.⁵ Given that marriage brings with it a wide range of property and financial entitlements, the descriptive, 'predatory' does effectively reflect the dynamics at play when one person marries another of limited capacity solely in the pursuit of financial advantages.⁶ Older adults may also be vulnerable to abuse or pressure to co-habit for unscrupulous reasons. While co-habitation does not bring with it the same property rights and financial consequences of marriage, living with a predator can still have equally serious consequences.

Similarly, vulnerable older adults may be unduly pressured not to live with or marry persons by adult children of prior unions who disapprove of later life partnerships. Adult children may see an opportunity to persuade, or use undue influence to coerce a vulnerable older parent to divorce, or cease living with a partner once that older parent's capacity to manage their personal care appears to be compromised. The personal autonomy of the older adult is often over-looked, as is the paramountcy of determining the older parent's decisional capacity.

Determining whether an older adult has the requisite decisional capacity to marry, to co-habit, to separate and to divorce is explored in this paper as well as related issues such as predatory marriages, and the nature and extent of the role of the litigation guardian in such matters.

⁵ Ibid.

⁶ Ibid.

2. What is Capacity?

In Ontario, there is no single legal definition of “capacity”. This differs from other provinces, such as Alberta, which specifically defines capacity.⁷ Ontario’s *Substitute Decisions Act, 1992*⁸ (the “SDA”) which addresses various types of capacity, simply defines “capable” as “mentally capable”, and provides that “capacity” has a corresponding meaning. What does this mean?

Equally puzzling is the fact that there is no general or consistent approach to apply in determining or establishing “capacity”, “mental capacity” or “competency”. Each particular task or decision undertaken has its own corresponding capacity characteristics and determining criteria.

In general, all persons are deemed capable of making decisions at law. Most provincial statutes, including the SDA and British Columbia’s Adult Guardianship Act, confirm that presumption stands unless and until the presumption of capacity is legally rebutted, and this presumption is reflected in jurisprudence.⁹

⁷ Adult Guardianship and Trusteeship Act, SA 2008, c A-4.2 as amended

⁸ S.O. 1992, c. 30 as am [hereinafter SDA]

⁹ SDA, supra note 8, s. 2; Adult Guardianship Act, RSBC 1996, c 6, section 3; Palahnuk v. Palahnuk Estate, [2006] O.J. No. 5304 (QL), 154 A.C.W.S. (3d) 996 (S.C.J.) [hereinafter Palahnuk Estate]; Brillinger v. Brillinger-Cain, [2007] O.J. No. 2451 (QL), 158 A.C.W.S. (3d) 482 (S.C.J.) [hereinafter Brillinger v. Brillinger-Cain]; Knox v. Burton (2004), 6 E.T.R. (3d) 285, 130 A.C.W.S. (ed) 216 (Ont. S.C.J.) [hereinafter Knox v. Burton]

Decisional capacity is determined upon factors of mixed law, medicine and fact by applying the evidence available to the applicable capacity consideration as at the relevant time.¹⁰ Often reference is made to a capacity “test.” However, there is no “test,” so to speak; rather, there are different criteria to consider in determining decisional capacity.

Capacity is an area of enquiry where medicine and law collide, in that legal practitioners are often dealing with clients who have medical and cognitive challenges, and medical practitioners are asked to apply legal criteria in their clinical practices, or are asked to review evidence retrospectively to determine whether at the relevant time an individual had the requisite decisional capacity to complete a specific task.

The assessment of capacity is a less-than-perfect science, both from a legal and medical perspective. Capacity determinations are often complicated: in addition to professional and expert evidence, lay evidence is relevant to assessing decisional capacity. The standard of assessment varies and this too, can become an obstacle that is difficult to overcome in determining capacity as well as in resolving disputes over the quality and integrity of capacity findings. To add further to the complication, in contentious settings, capacity is frequently evaluated retrospectively, when a conflict arises relating to a long ago decision of a person, alive or deceased. The evidentiary weight given to such assessments varies. In some cases where medical records exist, a retrospective analysis over time can provide comprehensive and compelling evidence of decisional capacity.

¹⁰ Starson v. Swayze, [2003] 1 S.C.R. 722 [hereinafter Starson v. Swayze]

Capacity is decision, time and situation-specific. This means that a person may be capable with respect to some decisions, at different times, and under different circumstances. A person is not globally “capable” or “incapable” and there is no specific standard to determine general capacity. Rather, capacity is determined on a case-by-case basis in relation to a particular or specific task/decision and at a moment in time.

Capacity is Decision-Specific

Capacity is decision-specific in that, for example, as determined by legislation, the capacity to grant a power of attorney for property differs from the capacity to grant a power of attorney for personal care, which in turn differs from the capacity to manage one’s property or personal care. Testamentary capacity, the capacity to enter into a contract, to give a gift, to marry, to separate or to divorce, all involve different considerations as determined at common law. As a result, an individual may be capable of making personal care decisions, but not capable of managing property, or capable of granting a power of attorney document, but, not capable of making a Will. The possibilities are unlimited as each task or decision undertaken has its own specific factors to consider in its determination.

Capacity is Time-Specific

Capacity is time-specific in that legal capacity can fluctuate over time. The legal standard builds in allowances for “good” and “bad” days where capacity can and does fluctuate depending on the cause. As an example, an otherwise capable person may lack capacity when under the influence of alcohol. Even in situations where an individual suffers from a non-reversible and/or progressive disorder, that person may not be permanently incapable, and may have decisional capacity at differing times. Much depends on the unique circumstances of the individual and the medical diagnosis. Courts have consistently accepted the principle that capacity to grant a power of attorney or to make a Will can vary over time.¹¹

The factor of time-specificity as it relates to determining capacity means that any expert assessment or examination of capacity must clearly state the time of the assessment. If an expert assessment is not contemporaneous with the giving of instructions, the making of the decision or the undertaking of the task, then it may have less probative value than the evidence of, for instance, a drafting solicitor who applies a legal analysis in determining requisite capacity commensurate with the time that instructions are received.¹²

¹¹ Palahnuk Estate, Brillinger v. Brillinger-Cain, Knox v. Burton, all supra note 9.

¹² Palahnuk Estate, supra note 9 at para. 71.

Capacity is Situation-Specific

Lastly, capacity is situation-specific in that under different circumstances, an individual may have differing capacity. For example, a situation of stress or difficulty may diminish a person's capacity. In certain cases, for example, a person at home may have capacity not displayed in a lawyer's or doctor's office.

Although each task has its own specific capacity analysis, it is fair to say that in general, capacity to make a decision is demonstrated by a person's ability to understand all the information that is relevant to the decision to be made, and then that person's ability to understand the possible implications of the decision in question.

The 2003 Supreme Court decision in *Starson v. Swayze*¹³ is helpful in understanding and determining decisional capacity. Although this decision dealt solely with the issue of capacity to consent to treatment under the Health Care Consent Act, 1996,¹⁴ (a statute which is not addressed in this paper) the decision is helpful in that there are similar themes in all capacity determinations.

¹³ Supra note 10.

¹⁴ S.O. 1996, c. 2, Sched. A as amended.

Writing for the majority, per Major J: The presence of a mental disorder must not be equated with incapacity since the presumption of legal capacity can only be rebutted by clear evidence.¹⁵

Major J., emphasized that the ability to understand and process information is key to capacity. It requires the “cognitive ability to process, retain and understand the relevant information.”¹⁶ Then, a person must “be able to apply the relevant information to the circumstances, and be able to weigh the foreseeable risks and benefits of a decision or lack thereof.”¹⁷

A capable person requires the “ability to appreciate the consequences of a decision”, and not necessarily an “actual appreciation of those consequences”.¹⁸ A person should not be deemed incapable for failing to understand the relevant information and/or appreciate the implications of a decision, if that person possesses the ability to comprehend the information and consequences of a decision.

Major J. also made note that the subject matter of the capacity assessment need not agree with the assessor on all points, and that mental capacity is not equated with correctness or reasonableness.¹⁹ A capable person is ¹⁵ Starson v. Swayze, supra note 10 at para. 77. This case was most recently applied in the Ontario Court of Appeal case of Gajewski v. Wilkie 2014 ONCA 897 which deals with statutory guide for capacity to consent to treatment under the Health Care Consent Act, 1996, S.O. 199, c.2. Sched.A.

¹⁶ Ibid. at para. 78

¹⁷ Ibid. at para. 78

¹⁸ Ibid. at paras. 80-81

¹⁹ Ibid. at para. 79

entitled to be unwise in decision-making. In the oft-cited decision of Re. Koch,²⁰ Quinn J. wrote as follows:

It is mental capacity and not wisdom that is the subject of the SDA and the HCCA. The right knowingly to be foolish is not unimportant; the right to voluntarily assume risks is to be respected. ...²¹

For detailed information on capacity, see Whaley Estate Litigation checklists and publications:

http://whaleyestatelitigation.com/resources/WEL_CapacityChecklist_EstatePlanningContext.pdf;

http://whaleyestatelitigation.com/resources/WEL_SummaryofCapacityCriteria.pdf

3. Property Law/Testamentary Considerations

To truly appreciate the importance of capacity in the context of marriage, separation and divorce, it is necessary to understand what entitlements may be gained or lost.

Put in context, it is important to note that in Ontario, and in many other Canadian provinces, marriage automatically revokes a Will/testamentary document pursuant to section 15 of the Succession Law Reform Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. S.26. (the “SLRA”), and the exceptions thereto as set out at section 16 of the SLRA. One of the applicable exceptions applies where there is a declaration in the Will that it is made in contemplation of marriage. The 2010 Court of Appeal decision in British Columbia, *MacLean Estate v. Christiansen*²² held that extrinsic evidence supported the term “spouse” as used in the Will to mean the testator’s legal spouse, with whom he was contemplating marriage. Ontario legislation would not likely provide for such a result, it requiring “a declaration in the Will” (Section 16(a)).²³

²⁰ 1997 CanLII 12138 (ON S.C.) [hereinafter Re. Koch]

²¹ Ibid. at para. 89

This revocation of a Will upon marriage can raise serious consequential issues where a vulnerable adult marries, yet lacks the requisite capacity to make a Will thereafter, or dies before a new Will can be executed. Some provinces have recognized this issue and have recently enacted legislation to prevent revocation of Wills upon marriage. Alberta’s Wills and Succession Act came into force on February 1, 2012, and under that act marriage no longer revokes a Will.²⁴ British Columbia followed suit and on March 31, 2014, the new Wills, Estates and Succession Act (“WESA”) came into force. Under WESA, marriage no longer revokes a Will.

In addition to the testamentary consequences of marriage, in all Canadian provinces, marriage comes with certain statutorily-mandated property rights as between spouses.

Using Ontario legislation as an example, section 5 of Ontario’s Family Law Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. F.3 (the “FLA”), provides that, on marriage breakdown or death, the spouse whose “net family property” is the lesser of the two net family property calculations, is entitled to an equalization payment of one-half the difference between them. Such entitlements do not terminate on death. Rather, where one spouse dies leaving a Will, marital status bestows upon the surviving spouse the right to ‘elect’ and to make application to either take under the Will, or to receive an equalization payment, if applicable.

²² 2010 BCCA 374.

²³ Section 16 (a) of the SLRA.

²⁴ Wills and Succession Act, SA 2010, c W-12.2.

Even if a spouse dies intestate, the surviving married spouse is entitled to elect and apply either to take pursuant to the intestate succession legislation under the SLRA, or to elect to receive an equalization payment under the FLA. While a claim for variation (in other words, a challenge) of one-half of the difference can be made, it is rarely achieved in the absence of fraud or other unconscionable circumstances.

Section 44 of Part II of the SLRA provides that where a person dies intestate in respect of property and is survived by a spouse and not survived by issue, the spouse is entitled to the property absolutely. Where a spouse dies intestate in respect of property having a net value of more than the “preferential share” and is survived by a spouse and issue, the spouse is entitled to the preferential share, absolutely. The preferential share is currently prescribed by regulation as $200,000.00.²⁵

As is apparent, in some provinces, like Ontario, the marital legislation is extremely powerful in that it dramatically alters the legal and financial obligations of spouses and has very significant consequences on testate and intestate succession, to such an extent that spouses are given primacy over the heirs of a deceased person's estate. Ontario's SLRA also permits under Section 58, a spouse to claim proper and adequate support as a dependant of a deceased, whether married, or living common law. Notably, the decision of Belleghem J., in *Blair v. Cooke (Allair Estate)*²⁶ saw a determination that two different women simultaneously were legally spouses of the deceased and as such, were not precluded from both obtaining an award of support from the Estate.

²⁵ SLRA, O.Reg 54/95, s.1.

4. Capacity to Marry

Marriage vows often include promises to be exclusive, to stay together until death, and to provide mutual support. Yet, at the time of marriage, parties regularly as a matter of course fail to consider the significant property rights that arise out of the marital union; namely, the obligation to provide financial support, the enforced sharing of equity acquired during the marriage, and the impact it has on the disposition of one's estate.

Currently, in Canada, to enter into a marriage that cannot be subsequently voided or declared a nullity, there must be a minimal understanding of the nature of the contract of marriage. No party is required to understand all of the consequences of marriage. The reason for this is that cases dealing with claims to void or declare a marriage a nullity on the basis of incapacity often cite long standing classic English cases, such as Durham v. Durham,²⁷ which collectively espouse the following principle: "the contract of marriage is a very simple one, one which does not require a high degree of intelligence to comprehend.”²⁸

²⁶ 2011 ONSC 498.

²⁷ Durham v. Durham (1885), 10 P.D. 80 [hereinafter Durham]

(a) Statutory and Common law Requirements

With a few exceptions, most provinces and territories in Canada have marriage legislation that contemplates the necessity of capacity.²⁹ These statutes prevent the relevant marriage officiate from issuing a license to, or solemnizing the marriage of an individual who is known to lack the requisite mental capacity to marry,³⁰ is incapable of giving valid consent,³¹ or who has been certified as mentally disordered.

At a glance, in Manitoba, certain rigorous precautions exist, for instance, persons certified as mentally disordered cannot marry unless a psychiatrist certifies in writing that he/she is able to understand the nature of marriage and its duties and responsibilities.³² In fact, should a person who issues a marriage license or solemnizes the marriage of someone who is known to be certified as mentally disordered, will be guilty of an offence and is liable on summary conviction to a fine.³³

Section 7 of Ontario’s Marriage Act prohibits persons from issuing a license to, or solemnizing the marriage of, any person where reasonable grounds

²⁸ Durham at 82.

²⁹ Exceptions being Newfoundland and Labrador, Nova Scotia, Yukon, and New Brunswick.

³⁰ Section 7 of the Ontario Marriage Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. M.3, provides: “No person shall issue a license to or solemnize the marriage of any person who, based on what he or she knows or has reasonable grounds to believe, lacks mental capacity to marry by reason of being under the influence of intoxicating liquor or drugs or for any other reason.”

³¹ Marriage Act, R.S.N.W.T. (Nu.) 1988, c. M-4 (Nunavut)

³² The Marriage Act, C.C.S.M. c. M50, section 20.

³³ The Marriage Act, C.C.S.M. c. M50, subsection 20(3).

exist to believe that person lacks requisite mental capacity to marry by reason of being under the influence of intoxicating liquor or drugs or for any other reason.³⁴

In British Columbia, it is an offence under the Marriage Act to issue a license for a marriage, or to solemnize a marriage, where the authority in question knows or has reason to believe that either of the parties to the marriage is mentally disordered or impaired by drugs or alcohol.³⁵ This Act further provides that a caveat can be lodged with an issuer of marriage licenses against issuing a license to persons named in the caveat.³⁶ Once lodged, the caveat prevents the issuing of a marriage license until the issuer has inquired about the caveat and is satisfied the marriage ought not to be obstructed, or the caveat is withdrawn by the person who lodged it.³⁷ While at the time of writing there are no reported cases citing section 35 of the Act, I am aware from discussions with B.C. counsel that this provision does get used and is a good tool to delay or avoid questionable marriages in circumstances of incapacity. The caveat system, although useful, I am told is not fully implemented in that there is no centralized, searchable roster of caveats lodged in the province.

Where provincial legislation is silent on this issue of capacity and marriage, common law dictates that a marriage may be found to be void ab initio if ³⁴ Section 7 of the Ontario Marriage Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. M.3, provides: “No person shall issue a license to or solemnize the marriage of any person who, based on what he or she knows or has reasonable grounds to believe, lacks mental capacity to marry by reason of being under the influence of intoxicating liquor or drugs or for any other reason.”

³⁵ Marriage Act [RSBC 1996] chapter 282, section 35.

³⁶ Ibid, s. 23.

³⁷ Supra note 37 at subsection 23(2).

one or both of the spouses did not have the requisite mental capacity to marry. Thus, whether by statute or at common law, every province requires that persons have legal capacity in order to consent to, and therefore enter into a valid contract of marriage.

Several common themes appear to emerge from a comprehensive review of historical cases on the issue of decisional and requisite capacity to marry.³⁸ These themes are summarized here:

1. That the factors and standard for determining the requisite capacity to marry is equivalent to that of the capacity to contract;³⁹
2. That marriage has a distinct nature of rights and responsibilities;⁴⁰
3. That the contract of marriage is a simple one;⁴¹ and
4. That the standard for determining the requisite capacity to marry is the same as the standard for ascertaining capacity to manage property; or that it requires both the requisite capacity to manage the person and the property.⁴²

From a historical perspective, it is apparent that there is no single and complete definition of the requisite capacity to contract marriage. Rather, on one end of the judicial spectrum, there exists a view that marriage is but a mere contract, and a simple one at that; and, on the other end of the spectrum, several courts have espoused the view that the requirement to ³⁸ For a more in-depth discussion on the history of the capacity to marry, see “Capacity to Marry and the Estate Plan”, Canada Law Book, co-authored by Kimberly Whaley.

³⁹ See Lacey v. Lacey (Public Trustee of) [1983] B.C.J. No. 1016 (S.C.)

⁴⁰ See In the Estate of Park, Deceased, [1953] All E.R. Reports [Vol. 2] at 1411

⁴¹ See Lacey v. Lacey (Public Trustee of) [1983] B.C.J. No. 1012 (S.C.), Durham v. Durham, (1885), 10 P.D. 80 at p.82, In the Estate of Park, Deceased, [1953] All E.R. Reports [Vol. 2] at 1411, Hunter v. Edney, (1881) 10 P.D. 93.

⁴² Browning v. Reane, (1812), 161 E.R. 1080, [1803-13] All E.R. Rep 265; Spier v. Spier [1947] W.N. 46 (Eng. P.D.A.);

marry is not so simple; rather, one must be capable of managing one's person and/or one's property in order to enter into a valid marriage. Current legal treatment is unsettled and would benefit from judicial clarity. In the interim, we explore other legal doctrines to remedy the legal treatment until judicial precedent catches up with the development of property rights as they currently exist.

(b) Predatory Marriages

Reported case law suggests that predatory marriages are a societal issue, irrespective of country or culture. There appears to be universal characteristics that make these types of unions easy to spot. For instance, such unions usually involve one spouse who is significantly advanced in age and, because of a number of factors (which include loneliness consequent to losing a long-term spouse, or illness, incapacity, dependency, or vulnerability), is susceptible to exploitation. These unions are, more often than not, clandestine. We see examples of alienation, secrecy, sequestering from friends, family and loved ones which in our view are red flags that the relationship is not above board. Cases involving such fact scenarios include: Hart v. Cooper,⁴³ Banton v. Banton,⁴⁴ Barrett Estate v. Dexter,⁴⁵ Feng v. Sung Estate,⁴⁶ Hamilton Estate v Jacinto,⁴⁷ and *A.B. v. C.D.*⁴⁸

⁴³ Hart v. Cooper, 1994 CanLII 262 (BCSC)

⁴⁴ Banton v Banton, 1998 CarswellOnt 4688, 164 D.L.R. (4th) 176 at 244

⁴⁵ Barrett Estate v. Dexter, 2000 ABQB 530 (CanLII)

⁴⁶ Feng v Sung Estate, 2003 CanLII 2420 (ON S.C.).

⁴⁷ Hamilton Estate v. Jacinto, 2011 BCSC 52.

⁴⁸⁴⁸ AB v. CD 2009 BCCA 200.

Two recent cases, *Juzumas v. Baron*⁴⁹ and *Ross-Scott v. Potvin*⁵⁰, address issues of predatory marriage, yet with different outcomes.

While not necessarily a case where capacity is a primary issue, *Juzumas v. Baron*⁵¹ highlights an increasingly common fact scenario. In this case an elderly widower was duped into marrying his much younger, house keeper and would be caregiver under the pretense that if he married her, she would move in with him, look after him, and he would not be put in a home (which he feared), and so that the caregiver would be eligible for a widow's pension after his death. She stated the marriage was for no other reason related to his money or property. However, the real motive of the marriage for the caregiver was financial gain.

The day before the wedding, the caregiver took the older adult to a lawyer he had never met before to execute a new Will. The older adult's English was limited and the lawyer did not speak his language. The caregiver did most of the talking and the lawyer never met with the older adult alone. After they were married, they returned to the same lawyer and executed an agreement whereby the older adult's home was transferred into the name of the caregiver's son. The older adult was not truly aware as to the consequences of the agreement until his neighbour explained it to him. When the older adult returned to the lawyer to stop the transfer the lawyer told him it was too late and that it was "in the computer". Fortunately, with the help of a neighbour, the older adult was able to bring the perpetrator caregiver to court and successfully received a divorce order. The court also set aside the transfer of the house. Lang J., found that a presumption of undue influence existed between the parties as there was a relationship of an older person and his caregiver.⁵² Lang J. also found that the transaction was unconscionable under the doctrine of unconscionability.⁵³ Substantial costs were awarded in favour of the older adult plaintiff.⁵⁴

⁴⁹ 2012 ONSC 7220.

⁵⁰ 2014 BCSC 435.

⁵¹ Juzumas v. Baron, 2012 ONSC 7220.

In Ross-Scott v. Potvin,⁵⁵ the Court examined the issue of predatory marriages but also cautioned that it may not be appropriate to interfere in the love lives of older adults as personal autonomy to make decisions must be respected.⁵⁶ In this case, the only surviving relatives of the deceased (his niece and nephew) sought an order annulling their uncle's marriage to a much younger woman on the grounds of undue influence or, in the alternative, lack of requisite capacity. They also argued that various inter vivos transfers and testamentary instruments were invalid on the same grounds. Justice Armstrong applied the common law factors for determining requisite capacity to marry and ultimately dismissed all of the claims, in spite of compelling medical evidence of diminished capacity and vulnerability. Justice Armstrong noted that:

The heavy burden on the plaintiffs exists to ensure that [the deceased's] autonomy is respected. A court should only reject a person's autonomy in the clearest of cases where an individual lacks a "clear free and personal choice"⁵⁷. . . In this case, the plaintiffs' evidence was not strong or compelling. The evidence does not

⁵² Juzumas v. Baron 2012 ONSC 7220 para.11

⁵³ Ibid. at para.13.

⁵⁴ 2012 ONSC 7332.

⁵⁵ Ross-Scott v. Potvin 2014 BCSC 435.

⁵⁶ Ibid at para. 184 & 187.

⁵⁷ Ibid at para. 188.

establish that [the deceased] was terrified, coerced, threatened or did not understand what he was doing. Additionally, no evidence demonstrates that [the deceased's] decision resulted from the defendant's coercive power. The witnesses to the marriage ceremony observed nothing about [the deceased] to suggest he lacked an awareness of what he was doing or did not understand the event taking place or that he was coerced or influenced by [the defendant].⁵⁸

An International Perspective on Predatory Marriage: U.S.A and Australia

Professor Albert Oosterhoff's article, "Predatory Marriages",⁵⁹ provides an excellent review and analysis of international initiatives attempting to address the harms done by predatory marriages. He found that in the U.S.A., very few states have retained the revocation-upon-marriage provisions in their probate legislation.⁶⁰ Professor Oosterhoff also found that some states permit a relative to contest the validity of a marriage by an incapacitated elderly family member before the death of that family member, and in Texas, their legislation permits post-death consequences.⁶¹

⁵⁸ Ibid at para. 237.

⁵⁹ Albert Oosterhoff, "Predatory Marriages" (2013) 33 Estates, Trusts & Pensions Journal 24.

⁶⁰ Albert Oosterhoff, "Predatory Marriages" (2013) 33 Estates, Trusts & Pensions Journal 24 at p. 54.

⁶¹ Supra note 59 at p. 57. See also the recent case from Florida, Blinn v. Carlman, No. 4D13-1156 (Fla. 4th DCA 2015), affirming Circuit Court Decision, 15th District, Palm Beach County, Case No. 502012CP003699XXXMB, where an unscrupulous wife (shortly after their later in life marriage) had her vulnerable and incapacitated husband change his will for her benefit. The Court noted: "[b]efore and during the marriage, the appellant preyed on [the deceased's] paranoia and mental infirmity to alienate the decedent from his two children and their families." While the marriage itself was not challenged the will was set aside on the basis of undue influence.

Like Canada, Australia has also struggled to balance the autonomy of vulnerable adults with the necessity of protecting them from predatory marriages. Unlike Canada, Australia has met this challenge by legislating the factors for establishing the requisite capacity to marry. However, Australia's legislation is somewhat limited in that it requires the marrying parties to have the mental capacity to understand the effect of the ceremony, not an understanding of the nature of marriage as an institution with all its consequences.⁶² Some scholars have suggested that the legislation would be more effective if it required the understanding of the property consequences of marriage, yet judicial comment in Australia suggests that few people, if any, truly understand all the consequences of marriage.⁶³

In a recent decision out of New South Wales, Oliver v. Oliver, Australia's Family Court declared that the April 2011 marriage between the 78 year-old Mr. Oliver (deceased), and the 49 year-old Mrs. Oliver was invalid.⁶⁴ In doing so, the court reviewed the common law factors for determining the requisite capacity to marry as it developed in England and the subsequent enactment of the statutory factors in Australia. While the relevant legal factors differ from those applied in Canada, the facts, are instantly recognizable as those of a predatory marriage.

⁶² Marriage Act 1961 (Cth) subsection 23B(1)(d); see also Jill Cowley, "Does Anyone Understand the Effect of 'The Marriage Ceremony'? The Nature and Consequences of Marriage in Australia" [2007] SCULawRw 6; (2007) 11 Southern Cross University Law Review 125.

⁶³ Ibid. at p. 170 – 171

⁶⁴ Oliver (Deceased) & Oliver [2014] FamCA 57, para 213 (cited to AustLII)

Mr. Oliver suffered from alcoholism and alcohol related dementia at the time of his first wife's death. The predator spouse in this case took advantage of that and started exerting control over Mr. Oliver. She cancelled his in home care, started looking after his financial affairs, poisoned his opinion of his son, and refused to let him speak with his son or granddaughter, among other things. When the son eventually got through to his father on the phone he was advised that his father was married and that the wedding had already taken place. Earlier that year, the predatory spouse took Mr. Oliver to a doctor who certified Mr. Oliver was of sound mind and capable of making rational decisions and a few days later they attended a lawyer's office and executed a Will (in contemplation of marriage) which left everything to the predator spouse.

When Mr. Oliver fell and broke his hip shortly after the wedding, the public guardian and trustee was appointed as his guardian. Mr. Oliver's granddaughter brought an application under section 113 of the Family Law Act, just prior to his death, for a declaration that the marriage was invalid since Mr. Oliver was mentally incapable of understanding the nature and effect of the marriage ceremony. The Act provided standing to the granddaughter – such standing is not available under Canadian legislation.⁶⁵ When Mr. Oliver died, his new spouse did not advise his family.

⁶⁵ Oliver (Deceased) & Oliver [2014] FamCA 57, para 213 (cited to AustLII) at paras. 5 & 6; see also Albert Oosterhoff, "Predatory Marriages" (2013) 33 Estates, Trusts & Pensions Journal 24.

The Court reviewed judicial commentary on Australia’s capacity to marry, and in particular, Justice Mullane’s application of authorities in Babich & Sokur and Anor, as follows:

... it is in my view significant that the legislation not only requires a capacity to understand “the effect” but also refers to “the marriage” rather than “a marriage”. In my view taken together those matters require more than a general understanding of what marriage involves [emphasis added]. That is consistent with consent in contract being consent to the specific contract with specific parties, consent in criminal law to sexual intercourse being consent to intercourse with the specific person, and consent to marriage being consent to marriage to the specific person.⁶⁶

In Oliver, Justice Foster found that Mr. Oliver may have been aware that he was participating in a marriage ceremony, or at least some sort of ceremony, but no further.⁶⁷ The Court was satisfied that, as at the date of the impugned ceremony, the deceased did not have the requisite capacity to understand the nature and effect of the marriage and accordingly, a declaration was made that the marriage was invalid.⁶⁸

(c) Equitable and Other Remedies to Set Aside a Predatory Marriage

Since contesting the validity of a marriage on the grounds of incapacity is an imperfect approach, it may be necessary for litigators to consider whether other remedies could assist in reversing the financial gain enjoyed by the unscrupulous spouse. The purpose of this section is to consider ⁶⁶ Oliver, at para. 202, citing para. 255 of Babich & Sokur and Anor [2007] FamCA 236 (cited to AustLII).

⁶⁷ Oliver (Deceased) & Oliver [2014] FamCA 57, para 213 (cited to AustLII) at para. 210.

⁶⁸ Oliver (Deceased) & Oliver [2014] FamCA 57, para 213 (cited to AustLII) at para. 213.

other potential causes of action, including equity, which can be pleaded to set aside a predatory marriage as a nullity/void ab initio, or to otherwise remedy the wrongs caused by a predator spouse.

Undue Influence

The equitable doctrine of undue influence is often relied on to set aside a will or inter vivos gifts that were procured by undue influence. Numerous recent cases have explored situations where older adults have been victimized by undue influence.⁶⁹ The doctrine of undue influence is an equitable principle used by courts to set aside certain transactions where an individual exerts such influence on the grantor or donor that it cannot be said that his/her decisions are wholly independent.

The writer proposes that the same doctrine, if proven, may be used to set aside a predatory marriage. While the older adult may not be giving actual gifts to the predatory spouse, the consequence of the marriage effectively results in a gift to the predator. In Ross-Scott v. Potvin,⁷⁰ discussed above, the only surviving relatives of the deceased, Mr. Groves, sought to have his marriage annulled on grounds of undue influence and lack of capacity. Justice Armstrong applied the common law factors for determining requisite capacity to marry and ultimately dismissed all of the claims, despite compelling medical evidence of diminished capacity and vulnerability. With respect to undue influence, Justice Armstrong had this to say:

⁶⁹ See for example Gironda v. Gironda, 2013 ONSC 4133, additional reasons 2013 ONSC 6474.

⁷⁰ 2014 BCSC 435

I have concluded that the burden of proof regarding a challenge to a marriage based on a claim of undue influence is the same as the burden of proving a lack of capacity. The plaintiffs must provide the defendant's actual influence deprived Mr. Groves of the free will to marry or refuse to marry Ms. Potvin. The plaintiffs have failed to meet the burden of proving that Mr. Groves was not able to assert his own will.⁷¹

While the evidence was not sufficient for the Court to find undue influence in this situation, if proven, the undue influence doctrine should be available to set aside a predatory marriage.

Unconscionability

The doctrine of unconscionability is typically used to set aside a contract that offends the conscience of a court of equity. However, unconscionability is not restricted to the law of contracts. And, while it is closely related to undue influence, it is separate and distinct. A claim of undue influence attacks the sufficiency of consent. Unconscionability arises where an unfair advantage is gained by an unconscientious use of power by a stronger party against a weaker. In order to be successful such a claim would need proof of inequality in the position of the parties arising out of ignorance, need or distress of the weaker, which left him or her in the power of the stronger party and proof of substantial unfairness of the bargain obtained by the stronger. This creates a presumption of fraud which the stronger party must rebut by proving that the bargain was fair, just and reasonable.⁷²

⁷¹ Ibid., at para 240.

A predatory marriage is arguably characterized by one party taking advantage of a vulnerable party. There is often an inequality of bargaining power between the two would-be spouses. Accordingly, one could argue that it would be an improvident bargain if the predator is entitled to all of the spousal property and financial benefits that come with marriage.⁷³

Using a Statute as an Instrument of Fraud

The principle that one may not use a statute as an instrument of fraud should also be available as a tool to combat the unfair consequences of predatory marriages. In the context of trusts of land, the *Statute of Frauds*⁷⁴ provides that a declaration or trust of land is void unless it is proved by writing, signed by the maker. If it is not in writing and the beneficiary seeks to have it enforced, the transferee may claim to hold title absolutely and defend the proceedings by relying on the Statute. However, equity will not allow the Statute to be used as an instrument of fraud and the court will direct that the property is held in trust for the beneficiary.

⁷² Morrison v. Coast Financial Ltd. (1965), 55 D.L.R. (2d) 710 (B.C.C.A.), at p. 713. See also the recent case of Smith v. Croft 2015 CanLII 3837 (ONSCSM) where the Ontario Small Claims Court set aside a transaction as unconscionable where a neighbour purchased an antique truck valued at $18,000 from an elderly neighbour with dementia for $2000.00.

⁷³ See Juzumas v. Baron 2012 ONSC 7220, Morrison v Coast Finance Ltd., 1965 CarswellBC 140 (S.C.J.)

⁷⁴ (1677), 29 Car.2.c.3, s.7. and see RSNB 1973, c.S-14, s.9; RSNS 1989, c 442,s5; RSO 1990, c.S.19, s.9.

A marriage is also based on, and sanctioned by, legislation.⁷⁵ The predator relies on the statutes to enforce his or her claim. However, a predator's claim is fraudulent because the predator persuaded his or her spouse by devious means to enter into the marriage. A court of equity should not allow the statute to be used in this way, and should arguably restore the property to the vulnerable adult and / or his or her rightful heirs if it can be proved that the marriage was disingenuous.

No One Shall Profit from His or Her Own Wrongdoing

Yet another potential approach to attacking the injustice of predatory marriages would be to challenge the predator spouse's right to inherit from the victim's estate, whether under a will or intestacy legislation, instead of attacking the validity of the marriage itself. This would be a remedy based in public policy.

We can see this public policy approach at work in other areas of law. "No one shall profit from his or her own wrongdoing" is a principle that is applied in cases in which a beneficiary, who is otherwise sane, intentionally kills the person from whom the beneficiary stands to inherit under the deceased's will, on the deceased's intestacy, or otherwise. Canadian courts have found in such circumstances that the property of the deceased does not pass to the guilty beneficiary; instead, equity imposes a constructive trust on the property in favour of the other persons who would have otherwise received the property.⁷⁶

⁷⁵ See, e.g., Marriage Act, R.S.A. 2000, c. M-5; R.S.B.C. 1996, c. 282; C.C.S.M., c. M50; S.N.L. 2009, c. M-1.02; R.S.N.B. 2011, c. 188; R.S.N.W.T. 1988, e. M-4; R.S.N.W.T. (Nu.) 1988, c. M-4; R.S.O. 1990, c. M.3; R.S.P.E.I., 1988, c. M-3; R.S.Y. 2002, c. 146; Solemnization of Marriage Act, R.S.N.S. 1989, c. 436.

It is also clear in jurisprudence that a beneficiary will not inherit where the beneficiary perpetrated a fraud on the testator and as such obtained a legacy by virtue of that fraud,⁷⁷ or where a testator was coerced by the beneficiary into a bequest.⁷⁸ The comparable common law principle is ex turpi causa non oritur actio, ie. a disgraceful matter cannot be the basis of an action, discussed below.

In New York, two recent decisions provided a compelling analysis of these concepts and their applicability to predatory marriages which was relied upon. The facts in In the Matter of Berk,⁷⁹ and Campbell v. Thomas,⁸⁰ are quite similar. In both cases a caretaker used her position of power and trust to secretly marry an older adult where capacity was an issue. After death, the predator spouse sought to collect her statutory share of the estate (under New York legislation surviving spouses are entitled to 1/3 of the estate or $50,000, whichever is more). The children of the deceased argued that the marriage was “null and void” as their father lacked capacity to marry. The court at first instance held that even if the deceased was incapable, under New York estate legislation the marriage was only void from the date of the court declaration and as such, not void ab initio. The predatory spouse maintained her statutory right to a share of the estate.

⁷⁶ Lundy v. Lundy 1895 24 SCR 650.

⁷⁷ Kenell v. Abbott 31 E.R. 416]

⁷⁸ Hall v. Hall (1868) L.R. 1 P.& D. 48]

⁷⁹ In the Matter of Berk, 71 A.D. 3d 710 (2010)

⁸⁰ Campbell v. Thomas, 897 NYS2d 460 (2010)

In both appeal decisions (released concurrently) the court relied on a “fundamental equitable principle” in denying the predator’s claims: “no one shall be permitted to profit by his own fraud, or take advantage of his own wrong, or to found any claim upon his own iniquity, or to acquire property by his own crime.” This principle, often referred to as the “Slayer’s Rule”, was first applied in in New York in Riggs v. Palmer,⁸¹ to stop a murderer from recovering under the Will of the person he murdered. Pursuant to this doctrine, the wrongdoer is deemed to have forfeited the benefit that might otherwise flow from his wrongdoing. New York courts have also used this rule to deny a murderer the right to succeed in any survivorship interest in his victim’s estate.

The court recognized that while the actions of the predatory spouses were not as “extreme” as those of a murderer, the required causal link between the wrongdoing and the benefits sought was, however, even more direct. A murdering beneficiary is already in a position to benefit from his victim’s estate when he commits the wrongdoing, but it was the wrongdoing itself (the predatory marriage) that put the spouse in a position to obtain benefits. The court held that the predator spouse should not be permitted to benefit from this wrongful conduct any more than should a person who coerces their way into becoming a beneficiary in a Will.

⁸¹ Riggs v. Palmer, 115 N.Y. 505,511 [1889]

Arguably, such an approach ought to be available in Canada to defend/attack against these predatory entitlements and this principle should also be used to invalidate a predatory marriage.

Unjust Enrichment

The principle of unjust enrichment is well developed in Canadian law and largely developed in the context of co-habitational property disputes. To be successful in unjust enrichment, one must satisfy a three-part test:

1. that the defendant was enriched;
2. that the plaintiff suffered a corresponding deprivation; and
3. that the enrichment was not attributable to established categories of juristic reason, such as contract, donative intent, disposition of law, or other legal, equitable or statutory obligation.⁸²

In the New York case of Campbell, discussed above, the Appellate Division noted also that because the predatory spouse altered the older adult's testamentary plan in her favour, equity will intervene to prevent the unjust enrichment of the wrongdoer predator spouse.⁸³

The principle of unjust enrichment could arguably be used to invalidate a predatory marriage in Canada and restore the property to the rightful heirs. Arguably, where the facts establish a marriage was predatory in nature, the marriage should not qualify as a juristic reason to deny relief, since the marriage was motivated by the wrongful desire to obtain control of the older adult's property.

⁸² See Becker v. Petkus (1980), 117 D.L.R. (3d) 257, [1980] 2 S.C.R. 834 (SCC); Garland v. Consumers' Gas Co. (2004), 237 D.L.R. (4th) 385 (S.C.C.).

⁸³ Campbell, supra at p.119.

Civil Fraud / Tort of Deceit

An approach based in fraud, either common law fraud or equitable/constructive fraud is also worthy of consideration. In the usual predatory marriage, the predator spouse induces the older adult to marry by perpetrating a false representation that the marriage will be a "real" marriage (which the predator spouse knows is false, is a trick, is a misrepresentation). The older adult relies on the representation and marries the predator spouse. The older adult suffers damages as a result (either through money gifted to the predator spouse, or through the various rights that spouse takes under legislation).

One could argue that the predator's behavior meets the required elements to qualify and succeed in an action of civil fraud as a result of the following:

1. A false representation made by the defendant;
2. Some level of knowledge of the falsehood of the representation on the part of the defendant (whether through knowledge or recklessness);
3. The false representation caused the plaintiff to act (inducement);
and
4. The plaintiff's actions resulted in a loss.⁸⁴

⁸⁴ Bruno v. Hyniak 2014 SCC 8 at para. 21

Canadian Courts are rich with decisions analyzing civil fraud/tort of deceit in the context of marriage in “immigration fraud.” These cases involve one spouse who falsely represents that he/she is entering into a “true” marriage when in fact the marriage was entered into simply to attain Canadian residency.⁸⁵

While the Courts have been reluctant to set aside this type of marriage as a fraud, the jurisprudence provides insight into the facts that could give rise to a successful action. For example, in Ianstis v. Papatheodorou,⁸⁶ the Ontario Court of Appeal confirmed that civil fraud will not usually vitiate consent to a marriage, unless it induces an operative mistake. An operative mistake would be a mistake as it relates to a party’s identity or that the ceremony was one of marriage.⁸⁷ This case has been cited with approval many times and continues to be considered as the leading case.⁸⁸ The Courts’ reluctance to find that civil fraud will vitiate consent to a marriage appears to have prevented opening the floodgates to more litigation.⁸⁹

Notably, alleging fraud where one party to the marriage has character flaws not anticipated by the other is not a cause of action that the Court wishes to encourage, as is evinced by the following select comments:

⁸⁵ See for example Torfehnejad v. Salimi 2006 CanLII 38882 (ONSC) upheld 2008 ONCA 583; Grewal v. Kaur 2011 ONSC 1812; Raju v. Kumar 2006 BCSC 439; and Ianstis v. Papatheodorou [1971] 1 O.R. 245 (C.A.)

⁸⁶ Ianstis v. Papatheodorou [1971] 1 O.R. 245 (C.A.)

⁸⁷ Ianstis v. Papatheodorou [1971] 1 O.R. 245 (C.A.) at pp. 248 and 249

⁸⁸ See Torfehnejad v. Salimi 2006 CanLII 38882 (ONSC) upheld 2008 ONCA 583; Grewal v. Kaur 2011 ONSC 1812; Raju v. Kumar 2006 BCSC 439; and Ianstis v. Papatheodorou [1971] 1 O.R. 245 (C.A.).

⁸⁹ Ianstis v. Papatheodorou [1971] 1 O.R. 245 (C.A.)

First, on a principled approach it may be difficult to differentiate immigration fraud from other types of fraud. In Grewal v. Sohal 2004 BCSC 1549 (CanLII), (2004), 246 D.L.R. (4th) 743 (B.C.S.C.) the fraud consisted of the defendant fraudulently representing his marital intentions for immigration purposes and fraudulently representing that he did not have an alcohol or drug addiction. One can think of many other misrepresentations such as related to education, health or assets that might induce a decision to marry and which could be made fraudulently. If a fraud as to fundamental facts that ground the decision to marry is generally a ground for annulment, this certainly raises the spectre of an increase in the volume of costly litigation.

Even assuming that the law can logically extend to permit annulment on the basis of immigration fraud and not on other grounds of fraud, it remains that this may simply promote increased and expensive litigation. [emphasis added]⁹⁰

The Court's message, effectively, is "caveat emptor" – the spouses ought to have conducted their due diligence before marriage.⁹¹

However, predatory marriages are easily distinguishable from immigration fraud cases: a person under disability may not be, and arguably is not, for many obvious reasons, in a position to conduct due diligence.

Although it may be difficult for an older spouse to have a marriage set aside on the grounds of civil fraud/tort of deceit, he/she may be able to seek and receive damages for the fraud perpetrated. The case of *Raju v. Kumar*⁹², involved a wife who was awarded damages for civil fraud in an immigration fraud case where the court notably stated:

⁹⁰ Grewal v. Kaur 2009 CanLII 66913 (ONSC) at paras. 23-24

⁹¹ A.A.S. v. R.S.S., 1986 CanLII 822 (BC CA) at para. 25.

⁹² Raju v. Kumar 2006 BCSC 439

The four elements of the tort of deceit are: a false representation, knowledge of its falsity, an intent to deceive and reliance by the plaintiff with resulting damage. [. . .]

I find the defendant misrepresented his true feelings towards the plaintiff and his true motive for marrying her order to induce her to marry him so he could emigrate to Canada. I find the plaintiff married the defendant relying on his misrepresentations of true affection and a desire to build a family with her in Canada.

The defendant's misrepresentations entitle the plaintiff to damages resulting from her reliance on them."

The Court limited damages to those incurred for the wedding (cost of the reception, photos and ring), supporting his immigration to Canada (including his application, immigration appeal and landing fee) and the cost of her pre and post marriage long distance calls.⁹³

In Juzumas, discussed above, had the older adult continued with his claim for an annulment of his marriage and the Court was open to allowing a claim of fraud in this context, the older adult would have had to prove that the predator spouse knowingly made a false representation to the older adult, with an intent to deceive him and on which he relied, causing him ⁹³ Raju v. Kumar 2006 BCSC 439 at para. 72. See also the recent case of RKS v. RK 2014 BCSC 1626, where the Court dismissed a claim alleging the tort of deceit. A wife alleged that she was induced into marrying her husband on false representations that he was heterosexual, while in fact he was not. The wife also sought an annulment of the marriage citing non-consummation. The Court dismissed the claim and refused to grant an annulment as there was no evidence that the groom or groom's family made any false representations to either the bride or her family with an intent to deceive the plaintiff into marrying him. Prior to the wedding the plaintiff and her family had asked many questions about the defendant's background, his education, his financial situation and the kind of woman he was looking to marry. The Court found that the wife's claim for damages for the tort of deceit had to fail as it found that the husband never made any representations, prior to the wedding, about his sexual orientation. Furthermore the wife could not prove with medical or other evidence that the marriage was not consummated. The husband testified that it had been consummated. The Court denied the wife's claim for an annulment and granted a divorce instead.

damage. It could be argued that the predator spouse falsely represented to Mr. Juzumas that she would look after and care for him. Mr. Juzumas relied on that representation when he chose to marry her and he suffered damages. It is unlikely that a claim in civil fraud could be made out in Banton supra, unless it was raised before the older adult passed away.

Ex Turpi Causa Non Oritur Actio

The legal principle, ex turpi causa acts as a defence to bar a plaintiff's claim where the plaintiff seeks to profit from acts that are "anti-social"⁹⁴ or "illegal, wrongful or of culpable immorality"⁹⁵ in both contract and tort. In other words, a court will not assist a wrongdoer to recover profits from the wrongdoing.

Arguably, a Court should not assist a predatory spouse in recovering the benefits from a marriage which was obtained through the predator's devious, unscrupulous and anti-social means. The unscrupulous, should not be entitled to financial gain arising from the "anti-social" or "immoral" act of a predatory marriage. A predatory spouse alters an older adult's life and testamentary plan by claiming entitlements in the same manner as if he/she coerced the testator to add his/her name to a Will.

⁹⁴ Hardy v. Motor Insurer's Bureau (1964) 2 All E.R. 742.

⁹⁵ Hall v. Hebert 1993 2 S.C.R. 159.

Lack of Independent Legal Advice

The older adult in predatory marriages is often deprived of the opportunity to seek and obtain independent legal advice before marrying. Lack of independent legal advice is an oft considered factor in the setting aside of domestic contracts. Whether such arguments could be extended to set aside the marriage itself is a consideration worthy of a court's analysis.

Courts have consistently held that “marriage is something more than a contract”,⁹⁶ as such, there could well be judicial reluctance to extend contract law concepts and use them as a vehicle to set aside actual marriages, as opposed to simply setting aside marriage contracts. It is largely unclear whether such arguments extend to parties other than those to the marriage. If the victim so to speak dies, arguments may be difficult to pursue. However, parties such as children of the older adult are impacted by the union. This is a different approach to that of cases where capacity is challenged on the grounds of incapacity and the marriage then declared to be void ab initio, since these unions can be challenged by other interested parties.⁹⁷

⁹⁶ See Ciresi (Ahmad) v. Ahmad, 1982 CanLII 1228 (ABQB); Feiner v. Demkowicz (falsely called Feiner), 1973 CanLII 707 (ONSC); Grewal v. Kaur, 2009 CanLII 66913 (ONSC); Sahibalzubaidi v. Bahjat, 2011 ONSC 4075; Iantsis v. Papatheodorou, 1970 CanLII 438 (ONCA); J.G. v. S.S.S., 2004 BCSC 1549; Torfehnejad v. Salimi, 2006 CanLII 38882 (ONSC) at para. 92; and Hyde v. Hyde and Woodmansee (1866), L.R. 1 P.&D. 130 (H.L.).

⁹⁷ Ross-Scott v. Potvin 2014 BCSC 435 at para. 73

5. Capacity to Co-Habit or Live Together

Is there a difference in determining capacity to marry and capacity to co-habit or to live with someone? In Canada, there has been no reported decision that examines this issue directly. However, the recent English case of PC (by her litigation friend the Official Solicitor), NC v. City of York Council, is a good starting point.⁹⁸ In that case, the Court was asked specifically: “Is the test for capacity to cohabit the same as the test for the capacity to marry?”⁹⁹

The central issue was whether or not a woman (referred to as PC) had capacity to decide whether or not she could co-habit with her husband. The 48 year old woman was diagnosed with mild learning difficulties, had low IQ scores, and had a troubled childhood and was in and out of the child welfare system. In adulthood she had several negative relationships with men. In 2001 she moved in with her then-boyfriend. However, he was later arrested and convicted of serious sexual offences. The man denied his involvement and the woman believed him and stood by him. They married in 2006 while the man was in prison. He was set to be released in 2012 and the husband and wife wanted to start living together.

The relevant local authority asserted that while the woman had had the capacity to marry her husband, she lacked the capacity to decide to co-habit with him. They argued that the husband was a serious threat to the woman because of his violent sexual past. The Court at first instance agreed that she lacked capacity to decide to co-habit. This decision triggered the Court of Protection's jurisdiction under the Mental Capacity Act 2005, s.4 [MCA 2005] to determine whether or not it was in the woman's best interest to live with her husband or otherwise have contact with him. The wife and husband appealed the judge's determination on capacity.

⁹⁸ [2013] EWCA Civ. 478.

⁹⁹ Ibid. at para 2.

The trial judge had concluded that it must be taken that the woman had capacity to marry in 2006 and that she understood the obligations of marriage. However, the trial judge also concluded that the "presumption of capacity" must prevail on all issues in the current case other than her capacity to decide to live with her husband. The trial judge concluded that the woman did "not have the capacity to make the identified decision" and that she was "undoubtedly within section 2(1) requirements" for impairment based on the medical evidence provided: she lacked capacity as she was unable to make a decision for herself "in relation to the matter because of an impairment of, or a disturbance of the mind or brain".¹⁰⁰

Applying the section 3(1) factors (a person is unable to make a decision for herself if she is unable to a) understand the information relevant to the decision, b) retain that information, c) use or weigh that information; or d) communicate her decision) the trial judge was "not satisfied that she is able to understand the potential risk that [her husband] presents to her and that she is unable to weigh the information underpinning the potential risk so as to determine whether or not such a risk either exists or should be run, and should, therefore, be part of her decision to resume cohabitation.”¹⁰¹

¹⁰⁰ MCA 2005 section 2(1).

On appeal, the main ground of appeal was that the trial judge erred by wrongly applying a person-specific, rather than an act-specific, standard in determining capacity to co-habit.¹⁰² In other words the argument advanced was that the proper standard to be applied should be act-specific and should consider whether the woman lacks the capacity to decide to co-habit with any person (not whether she has capacity to cohabit with her husband specifically). The Appellate Court concluded that the specific provisions under MCA 2005 Part 1 provide that the determination of capacity under those provisions is decision-specific. Some decisions, such as agreeing to marry or consent to divorce are status or act specific. Other decisions, such as whether someone should have contact with a particular individual, may be person specific:

But all decisions, whatever their nature, fall to be evaluated within the straightforward and clear structure of MCA 2005, ss. 1 to 3 which requires the court to have regard to ‘a matter’ requiring ‘a decision’. There is neither need nor justification for the plain words of the statute to be embellished.¹⁰³

One, capacity to marry, involves understanding matters of status, obligation and rights, the other, contact and residence, may well be grounded in a specific factual context. The process of evaluation of the capacity to make the decision must be the same, but the factors to be taken into account will differ.¹⁰⁴

¹⁰¹ [2013] EWCA Civ. 478 at para. 13

¹⁰² [2013] EWCA Civ.478 at para.15.

¹⁰³ [2013] EWCA Civ. 478 at para. 35.

¹⁰⁴ [2013] EWCA Civ. 478 at para. 38.

. . . I readily accept that the evaluation of the capacity to marry and the capacity to cohabit, and in particular the evaluation of whether any apparent inability to make the relevant decision is 'because of an impairment of, or a disturbance in the functioning of, the mind or brain', will involve consideration of factors that are very closely related. On the facts of any particular case, and indeed on the facts of this case, it may be impossible for the court to come to contrary conclusions on these two issues.¹⁰⁵

The Court concluded that:

. . .this appeal must be allowed. Hedley J found that PC had (or must be taken to have had) capacity to marry in 2006. What does that finding entail? In Sheffield City Council v E [2005] Fam 326 Munby J explained: "To have the capacity to marry one must be mentally capable of understanding the duties and responsibilities that normally attach to marriage. What then are the duties and responsibilities that in 2004 should be treated as normally attaching to marriage? In my judgment the matter can be summarized as follows: Marriage, whether civil or religious, is a contract, formally entered into. It confers on the parties the status of husband and wife, the essence of the contract being an agreement between a man and a woman to live together, and to love one another as husband and wife, to the exclusion of all others. It creates a relationship of mutual and reciprocal obligations, typically involving the sharing of a common home and a common domestic life and the right to enjoy each other's society, comfort and assistance.

Thus, in 2006 PC had the capacity to enter into a contract the essence of which was an agreement to live together with her husband. If she had the capacity to make that promise, she must then have had the capacity to decide to keep her promise. There is no finding of any deterioration in her mental capacity since then. Nor has there been any relevant change of circumstances, because at the date of the marriage NC had already been convicted and imprisoned.

¹⁰⁵ [2013] EWCA Civ. 478 at para. 42

I well understand that all the responsible professionals take the view that it would be extremely unwise for PC to cohabit with her husband. But adult autonomy is such that people are free to make unwise decisions, provided that they have the capacity to decide. Like McFarlane LJ I do not consider that there was a solid evidential foundation on which the judge's decision can rest. We must leave PC free to make her own decision, and hope that everything turns out well in the end.¹⁰⁶

So ultimately according to this case if you have capacity to marry then you likely have capacity to co-habit since cohabitation is one of the duties/requirements of marriage. This is, one would argue, the same in Canada, as Canadian courts have held that cohabitation is part of the decision to marry. See for example in Banton v. Banton, where the Court observed: "the duty to cohabit is inherent in the marriage relationship."¹⁰⁷ Or in the case of Wolfman-Stotland v. Stotland,¹⁰⁸ where the Court, concerning marriage, observed:

Thus, if the parties are capable of understanding that the relationship is legally monogamous, indeterminable except by death or divorce, and involved mutual support and cohabitation, capacity is present.¹⁰⁹

Nevertheless, one must ask, is it possible to not have the requisite capacity to marry, but still have the capacity to co-habit? There are no reported decisions tackling this issue. However, arguably, capacity to co-habit could well be an even simpler decision than the decision to enter into a marriage.

¹⁰⁶ [2013] EWCA Civ. 478 at paras. 62-64.

¹⁰⁷ [2013] EWCA Civ. 478 at 225.

¹⁰⁸ Wolfman-Stotland v. Stotland 2011 BCCA 175.

¹⁰⁹ Wolfman-Stotland v. Stotland, ibid, citing Robertson's, Mental Disability and the Law in Canada pages 253-254.

As discussed in greater detail below, Justice Benotto in *Calvert (Litigation Guardian of) v. Calvert*¹¹⁰ compared the different standards of capacity – to marry, separate and divorce and concluded that “separation is the simplest act, requiring the lowest level of understanding. A person has to know with whom he or she does or does not want to live.”¹¹¹ In deciding to separate, the individual is forming an intention to live separate and apart. In deciding to co-habit, the individual is forming the intention to live with each other and together. Arguably, the same level of understanding would be required. Unfortunately, there is no reported decision to assist with clarifying this capacity standard.

6. Capacity to Separate

The question of the requisite capacity to separate was addressed in the British Columbia Court of Appeal case of *A.B. v. C.D.*¹¹² In that decision, the Court agreed with the characterization of the different standards of capacity and the standard of capacity to form the intention to leave a marriage, set out by Professor Robertson in his text, Mental Disability and the Law in Canada.¹¹³ Professor Robertson focuses on the spouse's overall capacity to manage his/her own affairs. This standard, which had also been relied upon by the lower court, is found at paragraph 21 of the Court of Appeal's decision as follows:

¹¹⁰ 1997 CanLII 12096 (ON S.C.), aff'd 1998 CarswellOnt 494; 37 O.R. (3d) 221 (C.A.), 106 O.A.C. 299, 36 R.F.L. (4th) 169., leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused May 7, 1998.

¹¹¹ Calvert, at para.57

¹¹² A.B. v. C.D. (2009), BCCA 200 (CanLII), leave to appeal to S.C.C. denied October 22, 2009, [2009] 9 W.W.R. 82 [hereinafter A.B. v. C.D.]

¹¹³ At page 272.

Where it is the mentally ill spouse who is alleged to have formed the intention to live separate and apart, the court must be satisfied that that spouse possessed the necessary mental capacity to form that intention. This is probably a similar requirement to the requisite capacity to marry, and involves an ability to appreciate the nature and consequences of abandoning the marital relationship.

The Court noted that this standard differs and is less onerous than that adopted in the English decisions of *Perry v. Perry*¹¹⁴ and *Brannan v. Brannan*¹¹⁵ which conclude that when a spouse suffers from delusions that lead to a decision to leave the marriage, that spouse lacks the requisite intent to leave the marriage. The Court of Appeal notably preferred Professor Robertson's characterization of capacity to that found in the older English cases, as it prioritized the personal autonomy of the individual in making decisions about his/her life.¹¹⁶

In cases where capacity fluctuates or disappears altogether, courts have held that as long as a person had requisite capacity at the time of separation from his/her spouse, and maintained the intention to remain separate and apart from his/her spouse while capable, then the entirety of the separation period could be counted for the purposes of a divorce, even if the person lost capacity during the period of separation.¹¹⁷

Recently, the Saskatchewan Court of Queen's Bench reviewed the requisite capacity to separate, among other issues, in the case of Babiuk v.

¹¹⁴ [1963] 3 All E.R. 766 (Eng. P.D.A.)

¹¹⁵ (1972), [1973] 1 All E.R. 38 (Eng. Fam. Div.)

¹¹⁶ A.B. v. C.D., at para.30.

¹¹⁷ O. (M.K.) (Litigation Guardian of) v. C. (M.E.) 2005 CarswellBC 1690 (B.C.S.C.) at para. 40

Babiuk.¹¹⁸ In this case, an older adult (after being admitted to the hospital for injuries to her body) was certified incompetent to manage her estate pursuant to The Mentally Disordered Person's Act, RSS 1978, c M-14 (since repealed by SS 2014, c 24). The PGT became her statutory guardian for property. After being discharged from the hospital the older adult resided in a care home and refused any contact from her husband. During a review hearing for her Certificate of Incompetence the wife stated that she had been physically assaulted and intimidated by her husband during her life and that she was afraid of him. She wanted to remain in her care home, separate and apart from her husband. She said she was happy and safe, although she could not name the care home or its address, could not file a tax return on her own and, while she had some knowledge of her financial situation, it was limited.

The PGT brought a petition seeking a division of family property pursuant to The Family Property Act and maintenance pursuant to The Family Maintenance Act. The husband brought a motion seeking an Order prohibiting the PGT from pursuing a property claim on behalf of his wife. The husband argued that his wife would not want the family property to be divided. The wife however testified in an affidavit that while she forgets most things, she does not forget her life with her husband. She also stated that she would like to have half of her family property and have it managed by the PGT.

¹¹⁸ 2014 SKQB 320

The Court noted that the wife may not be capable to manage her financial affairs but that does not mean she was not capable of making personal decisions. The Court cited *Calvert (Litigation Guardian of) v. Calvert*¹¹⁹:

Separation is the simplest act, requiring the lowest level of understanding. A person has to know with whom he/she does not want to live.

The Court in Babiuk concluded that:

In deciding issues of capacity, insofar as the law is able to, the appropriate approach is to respect the personal autonomy of the individual in making decisions about his or her life. . . There is evidence that [the wife] wants to live in the care home and not with [her husband], and that she wants her half of the family property. . .¹²⁰

The Court dismissed the husband's motion.

7. Capacity to Divorce

It appears that Calvert, cited above, arguably places the threshold for capacity to divorce as somewhat higher than the threshold for capacity to separate. The Court equates the threshold for capacity to divorce with the threshold for capacity to marry.

Separation is the simplest act, requiring the lowest level of understanding. A person has to know with whom he or she does or does not want to live. Divorce, while still simple, requires a bit more understanding. It requires the desire to remain separate and to be no longer married to one's spouse. It is the undoing of the contract of marriage.¹²¹

¹¹⁹ (1997), 32 O.R. (3d) 281 (Div. Ct), at 294, aff'd (1998), 37 O.R. (3d) 221 (CA), leave to appeal e'f'd [1998] SCCA No. 161

¹²⁰ Babiuk v. Babiuk 2014 SKQB 320 at para.48.

Justice Benotto continues, and points to a “simple” standard for capacity to marry:

The contract of marriage has been described as the essence of simplicity, not requiring a high degree of intelligence to comprehend: Park, supra, at p. 1427. If marriage is simple, divorce must be equally simple. The American courts have recognized that the mental capacity required for divorce is the same as required for entering into marriage: Re Kutchins, 136 A.3d 45 (Ill., 1985).¹²²

As for the specifics of the factors to be applied in assessing capacity, Justice Benotto favourably refers to the evidence of an expert physician, Dr. Molloy who outlined a case for the requisite factors for determining capacity:

I found the evidence of Dr. Molloy very helpful. Although he, like Drs. Silberfeld and Freedman, did not see Mrs. Calvert, he provided a useful analysis of the evidence and methodology for determining capacity. To be competent to make a decision, a person must:

1. understand the context of the decision;
2. know his/her specific choices; and
3. appreciate the consequences of the choices.

In English case law, the issue of capacity to consent to a decree of divorce is treated in the same manner as all other legally binding decisions. In the England and Wales Court of Appeal decision of Masterman-Lister v Brutton

¹²¹ Calvert (Litigation Guardian of) v. Calvert (1997), 32 O.R. (3d) 281 (Div. Ct), at 294, aff'd (1998), 37 O.R. (3d) 221 (CA), leave to appeal e'f'd [1998] SCCA No. 161

¹²² Ibid. at para 58.

& Co.,¹²³ the Court wrote that “a person must have the necessary mental capacity if he is to do a legally effective act or make a legally effective decision for himself” and citing the decision of *Mason v. Mason*¹²⁴ pointed out that this includes consenting to a decree of divorce.

The Missouri Court of Appeal upheld¹²⁵ a lower court finding that the wife was capable to commence proceedings for the dissolution of her marriage as she was able to explain the reasons why she wanted the divorce (in spite of having difficulties with dates and events), and because her testimony was consistent with evidence in other legal proceedings. As a result, over the objections of her husband, the Court granted the wife’s request for a divorce.

In *Wolfman-Stotland v. Stotland*¹²⁶ the British Columbia Court of Appeal was asked to consider the requisite capacity necessary to form the intention to live separate and apart and divorce. The appellant, Lillian Wolfman-Stotland at 93 years of age had sought a declaration from the British Columbia Supreme Court that there was no reasonable prospect of reconciliation with her 92-year old husband. Mr. Stotland had applied for a medical examination of Mrs. Stotland and Justice Smith of the Supreme Court had ordered that Mrs. Stotland be examined by a physician with respect to her capacity to instruct counsel, to manage her affairs, her capacity to form the intention to live separate and apart from her husband, ¹²³ [2002] EWCA Civ 1889 (19 December 2002) at para. 57.

¹²⁴ [1972] Fam 302.

¹²⁵ Szramkowski v. Szramkowski, S.W.3d, 2010 WL 2284222 Mo.App. E.D.,2010. (June 08, 2010)

¹²⁶ 2011 CarswellBC 803, 2011 BCCA 175, [2011] B.C.W.L.D. 3528, [2011] W.D.F.L. 2593, 16 B.C.L.R. (5th) 290, 333 D.L.R. (4th) 106, 97 R.F.L. (6th) 124, 303 B.C.A.C. 201, 512 W.A.C. 201 [hereinafter Stotland]

and her capacity to “appreciate the nature and consequences of abandoning the marital relationship.”¹²⁷

Somewhat confusingly, the assessing physician found that Mrs. Stotland “likely” had the capacity to instruct counsel in respect of the divorce; but did not have the capacity to manage her property; nor did she have the capacity “to form the intention to live separate and apart from her husband;” however, he did find that she had the capacity “to appreciate the financial nature and consequences of abandoning her marital relationship.”¹²⁸

The Chambers judge found, even more confusingly, in spite of the conclusion that Mrs. Stotland had capacity to instruct counsel, that she lacked the necessary capacity required to obtain the declaration she sought.

The Court of Appeal overturned the Chambers judge’s finding, and concluded that the judge “erred in law in the formulation and application of the proper test of the capacity necessary to form the intention to live separate and apart.”¹²⁹

The Court of Appeal referred to the decisions in AB v. CD, and Calvert, above, and referred favourably to Professor Robertson’s Mental Disability and the Law in Canada and in particular cited the following passage from pages 253 to 254 of the book, which points to a low threshold for capacity to marry:

¹²⁷ Ibid. at para. 12

¹²⁸ Ibid. at para. 14

¹²⁹ Supra note 113 at para. 21

In order to enter into a valid marriage, each party must be capable, at the date of the marriage, or understanding the nature of the contract of marriage and the duties and responsibilities which it creates...The test does not, of course, require the parties to be capable of understanding all the consequences of marriage; as one English judge aptly noted, few (if any) could satisfy such a test...the common law test is probably only concerned with the legal consequences and responsibilities which form an essential part of the concept of marriage. Thus, if the parties are capable of understanding that the relationship is legally monogamous, indeterminate except by death or divorce, and involved mutual support and cohabitation, capacity is present. The reported cases indicate that the test is not a particularly demanding one...

The Court of Appeal concluded, based on the authorities that capacity to separate is the same as the standard for the requisite capacity to marry, and that the “requisite capacity is not high, and is lower in the hierarchy than the capacity to manage one’s affairs.”¹³⁰

It is notable in this case, however, that there was a finding that the appellant was capable of instructing counsel, and of appreciating the financial consequences of a divorce. In fact, therefore there was evidence that she understood and appreciated the ramifications of a separation and divorce, such that her capacity was not so low.

In the brief decision of *Anderson v. Anderson*¹³¹ a husband applied for a declaration pursuant to s.57 of the (then in force) Family Relations Act,

¹³⁰ Ibid. at para. 27

¹³¹ 2012 BCSC 11

R.S.B.C. 1996, c. 128 (the “FRA”) that he and his wife have no reasonable prospect of reconciliation.

The wife opposed the application stating that she believes her husband’s children were behind this application and that they were unduly influencing an elderly, ill man with the goal of preserving as much of his estate for them as they could should he die.¹³² The wife was 55 and the husband was 85 years old. The husband says he moved to another residence because he no longer wanted to continue in a marriage relationship with his wife. He denies influence from his children. The wife had previously brought a claim asking for reapportionment of family assets in her favour, notably that she have beneficial ownership of the family home. The husband had severed the joint tenancy prior to the commencement of the action. The wife argued she would be prejudiced in her claim if a s.57 FRA declaration is made and that she would be prejudiced by no longer being a spouse with respect to rights she may have to some of his pensions.

The Court found that:

there is insufficient evidence with respect to any possible prejudice to deny to the respondent the declaration to which he is otherwise entitled in law (see Wolfman-Stotland v. Stotland, 2011 BCCA 175) on the facts of this case. By that I mean that I am satisfied that the parties have been living separate and apart since May 2010 and that it was the independent intention of the respondent to do so and to not continue in his marriage to the claimant. He made this even more plain when he subsequently took action to sever their joint tenancy of the matrimonial home.¹³³

¹³² 2012 BCSC 11 at para. 2.

¹³³ 2012 BCSC 11 at para.6.

The Court also noted that as the husband was “elderly and in poor health” should he die before the claim by the wife was dealt with by the Court, an administrator ad litem would be permitted to carry on the action for the determination and division of family assets pursuant to the declaration of irreconcilability.¹³⁴

(a) Setting Aside a Divorce Judgment

If a person lacked the requisite capacity to divorce, but a divorce judgment was granted, arguably the judgment can be set aside for lack of capacity.

In *Piwniuk v. Piwniuk*¹³⁵ a divorce judgement was set aside as the action should have been brought by the wife’s guardian and not the wife herself as she was incapable of seeking a divorce. The wife had suffered from a brain aneurysm and had difficulties communicating, processing and learning new information, understanding or formulating abstract concepts and had troubles with her memory.¹³⁶ A guardianship order was sought and granted for the wife and the order named her mother as guardian. Pursuant to s. 10 of the Dependent Adults Act, the mother had the power and authority to “commence, compromise or settle any legal proceeding that does not relate to the estate of the dependant adult. . .”¹³⁷ However, despite this, the wife filed and pursued the petition for divorce. The Court set aside the divorce judgement finding that the divorce action should have been brought by the wife’s guardian on behalf of the wife. The court found that ¹³⁴ 2012 BCSC 11 at para.5.

¹³⁵ 1992 CanLII 6213 (ABQB).

¹³⁶ 1992 CanLII 6213 (ABQB) at para.3.

¹³⁷ Dependant Act, s.10

this was “more than a minor irregularity” and the appeal was allowed and the divorce was set aside.¹³⁸

Other than on the ground of incapacity, a party could potentially attempt to seek the setting aside of divorce judgement on the equitable remedies set out above under “Capacity to Marry”. For example, one could argue that the divorce judgement was obtained by fraud, mistake, or non est factum, etc.. Each of these remedies and the standards or factors to be met are set herein. While in Ontario, Rule 15(14) of the Family Law Rules only allows a court to “change” a divorce order, rather than set one aside, there may be a possibility of setting aside an order by analogy to the Rules of Civil Procedure according to the Divisional Court in Diciaula v. Mastrogiamomo, 2006 CanLII 11928 (ON SCDC). Under Rule 59.6 of the Rules of Civil Procedure an order can be set aside for fraud.

8. Role of the Attorney and Litigation Guardian

If someone is incapable, can someone else file for divorce on the incapable person’s behalf?

Attorney

In Ontario, under the Family Law Rules (O.Reg 114/99 r.4(2)) an attorney under a CPOAP must obtain court approval to act.

¹³⁸ 1992 CanLII 6213 (ABQB) at para. 17

An attorney is not able to express the intention of a spouse to live separate and apart, which is normally speaking, a pre-requisite for separation under s.8(3)(a) of the Divorce Act.

An attorney (who is not a spouse of the incapable person) can execute domestic contracts and separation agreements on behalf of the incapable person, but only with court approval (FLA, s. 55(3) and (4)). However, a separation agreement cannot be valid if one of the parties does not have the capacity to form the intention to live separate and apart. If there is no intention to live separate and apart, an attorney also cannot apply for a division of Net Family Property or for a divorce. An attorney who initiates a divorce bears the onus of establishing the spouse had the capacity to form an intention to live separate and apart, otherwise the application may be dismissed for failure to satisfy this onus.

Litigation Guardian

In civil or family law proceedings, when a party is considered to be a “party under disability” it will be necessary to have a litigation guardian appointed (formerly referred to as “next friend” or “guardian ad litem”) to act on behalf of the party under disability. The purpose of a litigation guardian is to ensure that the party under disability has a representative to act on their behalf.

In the case of *M.K.O. (by his Litigation Guardian T.O) v. M.E.C.*¹³⁹ the plaintiff, through his litigation guardian – his son from a first marriage - sought a divorce based on a one-year separation and sought a division of family assets. The wife opposed the divorce stating that while they had been physically separated for over one year, neither of them had expressed a genuine intention to end their relationship. She argued that her husband was incapable of forming such an intention because he suffered from Alzheimer’s disease. The couple’s physical separation began when the wife placed her husband in a long-term care facility, and his son arranged for him to be released into his care. The husband had been living with the son ever since.

There were issues of alcoholism, Alzheimer’s, and alleged physical abuse and altercations between the husband and wife. When the husband was admitted to a hospital, the wife applied to be appointed Committee of her husband. The son counter-petitioned and was appointed Committee of the person and affairs of his father. Shortly thereafter the son filed the original writ of summons on behalf of his father as litigation guardian. Section 6(6) of the BC Rules of Court provide that: “Where a person is appointed committee, that person shall be the litigation guardian of the patient in any proceeding unless the court otherwise orders”

The Court noted that there are no common law principles and no provisions in the Rules of Court, the Patients Property Act or the Divorce Act prohibiting a litigation guardian from initiating a divorce proceeding.

¹³⁹ 2005 BCSC 1051

Nevertheless, the court noted that an action for divorce raises issues of status and posed the question: may a Committee initiate such an action involving status?

The Court concluded that:

I conclude that T.O., as Committee of the person and affairs of M.O., has the necessary status to commence and conduct these divorce proceedings. As emphasized in Beadle, however, he must demonstrate that the proceedings are in his father's best interests. As well, he has the onus of proving the requirements of the Divorce Act.

In the case of a patient who lacks capacity, however, it is not necessary to show a current intention. If M.O. had the intention to live separate and apart from M.C. and maintained that intention while he was still competent, then the finding of a one-year separation would still be possible even if he later became incompetent: see Calvert (Litigation Guardian of) v. Calvert[emphasis added]¹⁴⁰

There was a great deal of conflicting evidence of whether the husband ever expressed a clear intention to divorce or to live separate and apart from his wife. The Court concluded that the son did not establish on a balance of probabilities that his father had capacity to form or formed the intent to live separate and apart from his wife, or similarly, to divorce her. No divorce was therefore granted.

In Calvert, the Ontario Superior Court of Justice also examined the role of a litigation guardian in a divorce proceeding. The husband in this case contended that his wife did not have the requisite mental capacity to form the intention to separate from him and thus was not entitled to an equalization payment. He also argued that her appointed litigation guardian could not pursue a divorce on her behalf and that the litigation guardian was being derelict in his duties. The Court however confirmed that a divorce can be pursued by a litigation guardian pursuant to Rule 7.01 of the Rules of Civil Procedure and the cases of Mordaunt v. Moncreiffe (1874), L.R. 2 Sc & Div. 374 and Boswell v. Boswell, [1951] 2 D.L.R. 847 (Alta S.C.). The Court opined that the litigation guardian fulfilled his duties properly as: he “gave instructions” “which not only clarified the issues but resulted in an early trial date”; he “diligently pursued the best interests of Mrs. Calvert in the litigation, namely her entitlements to a substantial equalization payment”.¹⁴¹

¹⁴⁰ 2005 BCSC 1051 at para. 40.

In Babiuk,¹⁴² (referenced above) the husband argued that the PGT could not pursue a property claim on behalf of his wife. The PGT had become statutorily obliged to act as the wife’s property guardian after she was certified incompetent to manage her assets/estate. There was an appeal of this decision and on appeal the review panel agreed that the issuance of the Certificate of Incompetence was warranted. No application for personal guardianship was raised by the family. The PGT sought a division of family property pursuant to The Family Property Act, ss 1997, c F-6.3 and maintenance pursuant to the Family Maintenance Act, 1997, ss 1997, c F-6.2.

¹⁴¹ 1997 CanLII 12096 (ONSC).

¹⁴² Babiuk v. Babiuk 2014 SKQB 320.

The husband argued that the PGT could not pursue a property claim on his wife's behalf. He relied on Gronnerud (Litigation Guardians of) v. Gronnerud Estate, [2002] 2 S.C.R. 417, 2002 SCC 38 and certain sections of the Public Guardian and Trustee Act, SS 1983, c P-36.3. In Gronnerud, the Supreme Court of Canada had concluded that the two children who had been appointed as litigation guardians for their incapacitated mother and who had commenced matrimonial property proceedings on her behalf were in a conflict of interest and did not have the necessary indifference to act as litigation guardians. The Supreme Court of Canada replaced the litigation guardians with the PGT pursuant to The Adult Guardianship and Co-Decision-Makers Act.

However, in Babiuk, unlike in Gronnerud, the property division application was brought by the authority given to the PGT by the Public Guardian and Trustee Act exclusively:

This application does not present a situation with the factors necessary to prohibit the PGT from proceeding with the action for family property division on [the wife's] behalf. The Legislature has chosen to provide the court with jurisdiction to impose limitations and restrictions on property guardians and property decision makers when the matter is brought before the court for its determination pursuant to The Adult Guardianship and Co-decision-makers Act. However, when the matter is not placed before the court for that determination, and the PGT is appointed as property guardian purely by operation of The Public Guardian and Trustee Act, ss. 29(6) and 30 of that Act do not provide the court with the authority to place a limitation prohibiting the PGT from pursuing a property claim in its role as property guardian so appointed. Nor has it been shown in this case that any other basis, founded on the best interests of [the wife], exists such that interference with the exercise of the mandate of the PGT as property guardian in the way requested is warranted.¹⁴³

Furthermore, the Court noted that the facts in Babiuk could be distinguished from those in Gronnerud. In Gronnerud there was evidence that the Supreme Court of Canada found compelling in that the clear desire of the dependent adult was not to break up the family farm which had been intended to go to one son who was particularly close to the dependent adult. In Babiuk, the wife had testified that she wanted to pursue the property claim.¹⁴⁴

The following can be gleaned from the cases above:

- A litigation guardian can seek a divorce on behalf of an incapacitated person;
- The litigation guardian must show that the proceedings are in the best interests of the incapable person; and
- The litigation guardian has the onus of proving the requirements for divorce pursuant to the Divorce Act.

In Australia, the leading case discussing the role of a litigation guardian or ‘case guardian’ in a divorce proceeding is Underwood v. Price [2009] FamCAFC 127. In this case, a terminally ill man sought a divorce from his wife. It was a matter of “common fact” that it was his wish that he wanted a divorce and he communicated this fact to his daughter.¹⁴⁵ The husband ¹⁴³ Babiuk v. Babiuk 2014 SKQB 320 at para.60.

¹⁴⁴ Babiuk v. Babiuk 2014 SKQB 320 at para. 42.

¹⁴⁵ [2009] FamCAFC 127 at para.42.

lapsed into a coma and his daughter sought, and was appointed, case guardian for her father pursuant to an enduring financial power of attorney.

The daughter was appointed as case guardian and the divorce was granted on an expedited basis. The man died the next day. The wife appealed the divorce on multiple grounds including that the appointment of the case guardian should be set aside as there was a conflict of interest between the husband and daughter since the daughter had something to gain from the divorce. She also argued that the divorce should not have been granted on an expedited basis and if the appointment of the case guardian was set aside, then the divorce order would be void ab initio.

The wife argued that an attorney cannot make an application for divorce as what is required is a matter of intention and a decision that only a party to a marriage can make. The Court found that:

No authority was provided for the proposition that a case guardian may not bring an application for divorce. There is no reason why the role of the case guardian should be so limited. In addition, in this case it is quite clear that during the period prior to the husband being unable to manage his affairs an application for divorce was made by him. There is no doubt that the husband communicated to the wife on 3 April 2007 that the marriage was at an end and that he wished a divorce.¹⁴⁶

In concurring reasons, Justice Boland and Justice Ryan referred to a number of decisions where English Courts had dealt with applications by a guardian ad litem, generally on behalf of persons suffering a mental disability, for the disabled person's marriage to be dissolved.¹⁴⁷ The Justices observed:

¹⁴⁶ [2009] FamCAFC 127 at para. 96

Not surprisingly, given the aging demographics of the Australian population, and increasing incidence of dementia necessitating nursing home care (see Australian Institute of Health and Welfare 2008, Australia's health 2008, Cat. No. AUS 99, Canberra: AIHW at [216] – [218]), the Family Court and the Federal Magistrates Court have, in recent years, dealt with applications brought by case guardians seeking either divorce orders or a decree of nullity where one party to the marriage is suffering mental incapacity.

These cases throw into sharp focus what we perceive to be the crucial element in considering whether a case guardian can bring an application for divorce for the disabled party. That is, can the case guardian establish that a party to the marriage had the requisite intention to bring the marriage to an end? [emphasis added]¹⁴⁸

In the Underwood, the Justices concluded that:

We are satisfied it was an uncontroverted fact that the husband had formed an intention to bring the marriage to an end which he conveyed to the wife on 3 April 2007.¹⁴⁹

. . .therefore. . .the rules permit a case guardian to bring an application for divorce. But such an application will be nugatory unless the case guardian can satisfy the Court that the marriage has irretrievably broken down by demonstrating that the applicant, whom the case guardian represents, had the requisite intention to bring the marriage to an end and had lived separately and apart for 12 months prior to the filing of the application. Further, if the case guardian can lead evidence which proves the respondent has demonstrated the requisite intent, and lived separately and apart for the requisite period, that evidence can be relied on by the ¹⁴⁷ [2009] FamCAFC 127 at para. 129.

¹⁴⁸ [2009] FamCAFC 127 at para. 135-136

¹⁴⁹ [2009] FamCAFC 127 at para. 141.

case guardian acting on behalf of the applicant disabled person for a divorce order. (see Pavey & Pavey (1976) FLC 90-051, Todd & Todd (No 2) (1976) FLC 90-008 and Falk & Falk (1977) FLC 90-247)¹⁵⁰

However, the Justices also noted that the circumstances in which a court will be satisfied on evidence presented by a case guardian that a marriage has irretrievably broken down are likely to be rare. This was one of the rare cases.¹⁵¹

In another Australian case, that of McKenzie v. McKenzie [2013] FCCA 1013, the parties were married and commenced living separate and apart on May 1, 2001. There were no periods of reconciliation and the parties had no contact. In October 2001, the wife approached her mother to assist with getting a divorce. She needed her mother's assistance as she suffered from a mild disability at that time. The wife underwent surgery in March 2012 and sustained a brain injury. The mother, sister and brother were the wife's Guardians and Administrators. The mother was appointed as the wife's litigation guardian and filed an application for divorce.

The medical evidence from the wife's doctor included:

Overall while Ms. McKenzie consistently communicated a desire to seek a divorce, even with specific coaching where Ms. McKenzie was told the correct answers several times, she could not demonstrate adequate understanding of the nature and effect of the divorce processes or proceedings.¹⁵²

¹⁵⁰ [2009] Fam CAFC 127 at para 145.

¹⁵¹ [2013] FCCA 1013 at para. 163.

¹⁵² [2013] FCCA 1013 at para.22.

The Court found that the wife “was no longer able to manifest, through her cognitive ability, a desire to separate”. However, she had over the preceding nine month period, clearly demonstrated a desire to separate from her husband. While the applicable act required the parties to be living separate and apart for 12 months, the Court found that the “nine months that the wife lived separately and apart when she had the cognitive capacity to understand her actions, satisfied the requirement that the marriage has broken down irretrievably”.¹⁵³

9. Concluding Comments

Put simply, the requisite factors for establishing the capacity to divorce, like the requisite criteria for the capacity to marry, and the requisite criteria for the capacity to separate at common law and rightly, or wrongly, appears to be based on whether the person in question has an ability to appreciate the nature and consequences of the act, and in particular the fact that the act taken is legally binding.

However, as the law on the requisite capacity to marry is evolving, so must the law on the requisite capacity to divorce, and perhaps the requisite capacity to separate or even co-habit. This is an area worthy of tracking as the law continues to develop in light of the financial considerations raised in both marriage and divorce, the development of property rights and attendant legislative changes.

¹⁵³ [2013] FCCA 1013 at para. 24.

This paper is intended for the purposes of providing information only and is to be used only for the purposes of guidance. This paper is not intended to be relied upon as the giving of legal advice and does not purport to be exhaustive. Please visit our new website at <http://www.whaleystatelitigation.com>

Kimberly A. Whaley

November 2015