Osgoode Professional Development

Advising the Elderly Client

November 5, 2015

“New Spouse / Old Money: Claims Arising Out of Later in Life Partnerships”

Kimberly Whaley

Whaley Estate Litigation
www.whaleyestatelitegation.com
TABLE OF CONTENTS

I. INTRODUCTORY COMMENTS

- Overview of the Rise of Re-Partnership: Statistics ................................................................. 4

II. AVAILABLE SPOUSAL CLAIMS: AN OVERVIEW

1. Spousal Inheritance on Intestacy ................................................................................................. 8
   - Married Spouses ...................................................................................................................... 8
   - Common Law Spouses ............................................................................................................ 10
2. Division of Property .................................................................................................................... 11
   - Division of Property after Separation ....................................................................................... 11
   - Division of Property after Death ............................................................................................ 13
3. Enforcement of Spousal Support Orders after Death ............................................................... 16
4. Enforcement of Domestic Agreements after Death ................................................................. 16
5. Dependant’s Support / Relief ................................................................................................... 17
6. Unjust Enrichment and Other Equitable Remedies ............................................................... 20
7. Joint Family Venture ................................................................................................................. 21
8. Proprietary estoppel .................................................................................................................. 22
9. Challenges to Joint Title .......................................................................................................... 23
10. Predatory Marriages ................................................................................................................ 25

III. A REVIEW OF NOTABLE ESTATE DECISIONS ARISING OUT OF (RE) PARTNERSHIPS

- Intestate Succession and Unjust Enrichment – ON - Re York Estate ....................................... 25
- Intestate Succession and Unjust Enrichment – ON – Prelorentzos v. Havaris ......................... 28
- Intestate Succession – NB - Stanley Mutual Insurance Co. v. Shepherd ................................. 29
- Intestate Succession – SK - Cronan v. Cronan Estate ............................................................... 29
- Revocation of a Will on Marriage – AB – Fuchs v. Fuchs ....................................................... 31
- Enforcement of Separation Agreement – ON - Re Welin Estate ............................................. 32
- Enforcement of Domestic Contract – ON – McCain v. McCain .............................................. 33
- Joint Family Venture – Married Spouses – ON – Barrett v. Barrett ........................................ 35
- Equalization and Unjust Enrichment – ON – Martin v. Sansome ......................................... 37
- Pre-Marital Agreements and Survivorship Rights – ON - Caron v Rowe ................................. 38
- Dependant’s Support – Spouse – ON - Lalonde v. Moore ......................................................... 40
- Dependant’s Support – ON - Lukic v. Zaban ........................................................................... 41
- Dependant’s Support – Funding Order - ON - Kalman v. Pick .................................................. 43
- Dependant’s Support – Interim Support - ON - Blair v. Allair Estate(Cooke) ......................... 44
- Dependant’s Support – Section 72 Assets – ON - Dagg v Cameron ....................................... 46
- Dependant’s Support – PE – MacDonald Estate ................................................................. 47
- Dependant’s Support – BC – Griese v. Syret ............................................................................ 48
- Joint Title – ON - Hansen v. Hansen Estate .............................................................................. 49
- Joint Title – ON - Su v. Lam .................................................................................................... 51
- Joint Title – ON – Jones v. Jones ............................................................................................. 51
Joint Bank Accounts – BC – Pickard v. Knudsen ............................................................... 52
Joint Bank Accounts – ON - Sawdon Estate ................................................................. 53
Joint Bank Accounts – ON – Lowe Estate v. Lowe ....................................................... 56
Joint Bank Accounts – MB - Sawchuk Estate v. Evans et al. ...................................... 58
Pension Benefits – ON - Carrigan v. Quinn ................................................................. 60
Pension Benefits – ON - Vladescu v. CTV Globe Media Inc. ....................................... 62
Pension Benefits – ON - Stanton v. Coughlin & Associates Limited ....................... 64
Pension Benefits – NS – MacEachen v. Minniken ....................................................... 65
Beneficiary Designations – ON - Petch v. Kuivila ....................................................... 67
Beneficiary Designations – AB - Perry v. Perry ............................................................. 68
Beneficiary Designation – SK – Love v. Love .............................................................. 69
Beneficiary Designation – BC – Wilson v. Wysoki ...................................................... 70
Proprietary Estoppel – ON - Cowderoy v. Sorkos Estate ......................................... 72
Proprietary Estoppel – ON - Clarke v. Johnson .......................................................... 73
Proprietary Estoppel – BC - Scholz v Scholz .............................................................. 75
Predatory Marriage – ON – Juzumas v. Baron ............................................................ 78
Predatory Marriage – NY – In the Matter of Berk ....................................................... 82
Predatory Marriage – BC - Ross-Scott v. Potvin .......................................................... 84

IV. CHECKLIST ............................................................................................................. 87
I. INTRODUCTORY COMMENTS

Our high rate of separation and divorce; increasing prevalence of unmarried, cohabiting partners, particularly amongst older adults; recognition in the equality of same-sex partnerships/unions, in addition to common law developments giving rise to what constitute spousal, and ‘spousal-like’ relationships, have resulted in an increase in legal disputes arising out of such relationships. As an adjunct to such unions, children, step-children, adopted children, genetically procured children, add to the complexity associated with estate and succession planning.

These societal issues are a distinctly modern development. The volume of court decisions involving blended, complex or fractured family units, where a spouse has remarried or entered into a new common-law relationship, with children from multiple relationships, has exploded over the last several decades in the changing cultural climate following the liberalization of matrimonial laws. As the population ages rapidly, it is ever more important to consider these relationships from the perspective of effective estate planning and litigation prevention.

This paper, then, considers a sampling of decisions from the perspective of both the deceased and the estate-planning lawyer as a means of identifying lessons learned from post-mortem litigation.

There are many types of disputes arising after death where complex, fractured family units existed, for example, issues arising from:

- Intestate succession;
- Family Law Act Elections;
- the enforcement of spousal support orders and domestic contracts;

---

• dependant’s support claims (Succession Law Reform Act);
• unjust enrichment and its legal and equitable remedies, including equitable compensation, constructive trust, resulting trust, unjust enrichment, and quantum meruit;
• proprietary estoppel;
• pensions, legislation and planning initiatives;
• predatory marriages; and
• other disputes regarding the ownership of property, including jointly held property.

This paper is by no means exhaustive in its approach or content. The subject matter is broad, and a mere overview of some of the many developing patterns across Canada is considered while paying particular attention to the specific challenges arising out of re-partnership.

Overview of the Rise of Re-Partnership: Statistics

Marriage is a rite of passage that carries with it intense personal, familial and societal significance. Most people marry, and many marry more than once. It is a societal ritual that is familiar, comforting and celebratory. However, in addition to the emotional, familial, societal and cultural importance of marriage, it too brings with it significant legal and property entitlements. The act of marriage not only alters an individual’s personal life, but significantly impacts one’s financial life.

Competing spousal claims were comparatively rare as recently as the late 1960’s, likely because divorce was less common and re-partnership outside of marriage did not necessarily result in new legal rights, particularly property rights, for new partners.

Before the passage of the Divorce Act, 1968, obtaining a divorce was difficult. In Ontario, the primary grounds for divorce were adultery, cruelty or abandonment. The Divorce Act, 1968, somewhat liberalized the grounds for divorce. Still, a complete, no-fault divorce, based on one year of separation and without a trial, was not available until the passage of the Divorce Act, 1985.

Similarly, a common-law partner was not entitled to make a claim for dependant’s support in Ontario until 1977. Because divorce was uncommon, so too was remarriage and, as a result, support claims by new partners/spouses were relatively rare.

It has only been 47 years since the Divorce Act, 1968, and 30 years since the Divorce Act, 1985, came into force. A Canadian who is 79 years old today – just under the current average lifespan in Canada – would have been approximately 32 years old at the advent of the initial wave of liberalized divorce. The same Canadian would have been approximately 50 years old when the path to divorce was broadened in 1985. In other words, people dying at an average old age this past year were already, or were approaching, middle age when these rights arose; they have had less time in their lives to develop the legal obligations arising out of re-partnership than a person who coming of age under this regime.

Canadians who reached the age of majority in the era of common-law dependants’ support legislation are 55 years old or younger in 2015. Those who reached the age of majority in the era of no-fault divorce are approximately 45 years old and younger in 2015. This younger cohort will be the first group of Canadians who have, for their entire adult lives, had the opportunity to develop a web of competing spousal claims. This generation will reach their average lifespan in about 25 to 35 years. It therefore seems likely that, even if the growth of remarriage and re-partnership were to stabilize in the very near future, the legal system should expect a continued influx of spousal disputes as death catches up with the social arrangements that this generation has adopted in life. Recent statistical data suggests that the numbers have in fact not yet stabilized. Growth in the number of complex families continues. The 2011 Census on families, households, and marital status data shows that people are choosing family structures that create more complicated personal and legal relationships.\(^3\)

---

- Between 2006 and 2011, the number of common-law couples rose 13.9% to nearly 3 million couples. This was more than four times the increase for married couples, which was only 3.1%;
- Same-sex couples account for 64,575 families in Canada, an increase of 42.4% from 2006. 43,560 of these couples are in common-law relationships;
- Of the 3,684,675 Canadian couples with children, 12.6% of them, or 464,269 families, are stepfamilies with one or more children not biologically related to one of the parents;
- 41% of stepfamilies are “complex” stepfamilies, where there is at least one child of both parents as well as at least one child of one parent only; and
- Married couples declined from 91.6% of all families in 1961 to 67.0% in 2011.\(^4\)

These trends demonstrate an increase in competing family interests. Notably, common-law spouses are much less likely than married spouses to consult a lawyer following the breakdown of a relationship. While 58.2% of separating spouses and 76.0% of divorcing spouses sought advice, only 25.3% of separating common-law spouses did the same.\(^5\)

It is important for lawyers and other professional advisors to be aware of, and to stay current on the legal consequences arising out of these complex family structures.

II. AVAILABLE SPOUSAL CLAIMS: AN OVERVIEW

---

\(^5\) Ibid.
1. Spousal Inheritance on Intestacy

Intestacies, or partial intestacies, exist for a number of reasons: a person dies having never executed a will; a person executes a will, but it is revoked due to marriage or the testator chooses to revoke it by destroying it or a person to whom a residuary gift is made predeceases the testator; or a person executes a will with the intention that it has dealt with one’s entire estate but after the testator’s death the will (or a portion of the will) is declared invalid due to a drafting error, undue influence, lack of capacity, or other reasons.

Some common questions in situations of re-marriage or later in life partnerships are: what if my spouse or common-law partner dies intestate? Do I have any claims to his or her estate? What if I am his or her second spouse or partner? Does that change anything?

Married Spouses

Historically there were few rights that a surviving spouse could assert against the estate of a deceased person. The main protection was the common-law rule that marriage revoked a Will. This allowed a surviving spouse to inherit on intestacy as long as the other spouse did not make a new Will.

An intestacy can create a windfall situation for a surviving spouse. In Ontario, where a married person dies intestate in respect of property and is survived by a spouse and not survived by issue, the spouse is entitled to the property absolutely. Where a spouse dies intestate in respect of property having a net value of more than the “preferential share” and is survived by a spouse and issue, the spouse is entitled to the preferential share absolutely. The preferential share is currently prescribed by regulation as $200,000.00. The remaining one-third to one-half of the residue will also be paid to the

---

6 Professor A. H. Oosterhoff, “Predatory Marriages”, Law Society of Upper Canada, 14th Annual Estates and Trust Summit at p. 29., and his article published in the ETPJ, Albert H. Oosterhoff, "Predatory Marriages" (2013), 33 E.T.P.J. 24
7 Succession Law Reform Act, RSO 1990, c S.26, s. 44.
8 Ibid. s. 46.
9 O Reg 54/95.
spouse according to the formula set out in the SLRA.\textsuperscript{10}

The common-law rule that a Will is revoked by marriage has been codified in many provinces. For example, section 15 of the SLRA in Ontario provides that a prior Will is revoked upon the valid marriage of the testator. Section 16 sets out exceptions, the most commonly applicable of which is that the Will is not revoked by marriage if it contains a declaration that it was made in contemplation of marriage.

The rules of intestacy are strict in Ontario. The case of Scotia Mortgage Corp. v. Davidson Estate\textsuperscript{11} illustrates just how intestacy can produce a harsh and, as in this case, seemingly unjust result in situations involving relatively small estates. The deceased remarried two years after his first wife died, but then passed away less than a year later without leaving a Will. The deceased had eight children from his first marriage. The estate was worth less than $200,000, so the new wife received all of it as her preferential share, and the children received nothing. The court was powerless to avoid this result in the face of clear statutory language.

Not all provinces share this approach. Section 23(2) of the Alberta Wills and Succession Act, which came into force on February 1, 2012, provides that no Will or part of a Will is revoked by the marriage of the testator, or the testator’s entering into an adult interdependent relationship.\textsuperscript{12}

British Columbia’s Wills, Estates and Succession Act, ("WESA")\textsuperscript{13} which came into force March 31, 2014, also provides that a Will is not presumed to be revoked by marriage or a change in common-law or marriage-like relationships.

New Brunswick has a unique approach that could be described as a hybrid between revocation on marriage and non-revocation on marriage. As in most other provinces, a will made before marriage is revoked on marriage,\textsuperscript{14} subject to certain exceptions.\textsuperscript{15}

\textsuperscript{10} SLRA, s. 46
\textsuperscript{11} Scotia Mortgage Corp. v. Davidson Estate, 2009 CarswellOnt 2297 (SCJ).
\textsuperscript{12} SA 2010 c. W-12.2.
\textsuperscript{13} SBC 2009, c13
\textsuperscript{14} Wills Act, RSNB 1973, c W-9, s. 15(2)
However, unlike in other provinces, a person who would have received a gift in the revoked Will can apply to court to receive that gift, and the court may give effect to all or part of the gift.\(^{16}\) The power is discretionary, and the court is directed to consider whether putting the gift into effect would be an undue detriment to a person receiving on an intestacy.\(^{17}\) There will be no undue detriment to the person receiving on intestacy if that person receives what they would have received under the revoked Will.\(^{18}\)

Equalization of Net Family Property

Also in Ontario, instead of inheriting under the intestacy laws, a married spouse has the option of making an election under section 5 of the Family Law Act to seek an equalization of the net family property upon the death of their spouse (discussed in more detail below, under Division of Property). Before making this decision it is important to determine under which scenario the surviving spouse would receive a greater inheritance.

Common Law Spouses

In Ontario, common law spouses do not have the same statutory rights as married spouses on an intestacy. They have no legislated right to a preferential share. Nor do common-law spouses have the ability to make an election for equalization of net family property under the Family Law Act.

However, a common law spouse does have the statutory right to seek dependant support under the SLRA (discussed in greater detail below under Dependant’s Support / Relief), if they meet the definition of “spouse”, which include two persons who are not married but have cohabited continuously for a period of not less than three years or are in a relationship of some permanence, if they are natural or adoptive parents of a child.

Another option for common law spouses on an intestacy would be to bring a claim for

---

\(^{15}\) Ibid., s. 16
\(^{16}\) Ibid., s. 15.1(3)
\(^{17}\) Ibid., s. 15.1(4)
\(^{18}\) Ibid., s. 15.1(5)
unjust enrichment and seek the legal and equitable remedies that such a claim would provide (also discussed below).

In British Columbia, as well as in Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba, common-law partners now have the same rights as married couples on intestacy.\(^19\) In the remaining provinces, only legally married spouses have a right to a share of the estate under intestacy legislation.

2. Division of Property

Division of Property after Separation

In most Canadian common-law jurisdictions, married spouses are entitled to a division of property following separation. In Ontario, under the Family Law Act, spouses may apply for an equalization of net family property (“NFP”).\(^20\) A spouse’s NFP is their net worth on the date of separation less their net worth on the date of marriage, excluding gifts and inheritances received during the marriage, life insurance proceeds received during the marriage, and personal injury settlement funds received during the marriage.\(^21\) The amount of the equalization payment is calculated as follows: the spouse with the greater NFP pays the spouse with the lesser NFP one-half of the difference.

British Columbia and Nova Scotia have different regimes for dividing property between spouses.

The British Columbia Family Law Act,\(^22\) which replaced the previous Family Relations Act, came fully into force in March 18, 2013.\(^23\) This new legislation abandons the division of family assets and moves to an equalization regime similar to that in Ontario.

---

\(^{20}\) Family Law Act, RSO 1990, c F.3 [FLA], s. 5(1).

\(^{21}\) Supra note 18, s. 4(1) and (2).

\(^{23}\) B.C. Reg. 131/2012.
The British Columbia Family Law Act also extends the same rights for property division to common-law spouses as to married spouses. In that respect, it joins Saskatchewan and Manitoba as the only other common-law provinces to do this.\(^{24}\)

British Columbia’s WESA also finds no meaningful distinctions between married and unmarried spouses. This particular piece of legislation is interesting in this context because its changes attempt to recognize or anticipate claims arising from modern blended or complex families. The spousal share on intestacy, for example, which was set in B.C. at $300,000, is reduced to $150,000 when all the children of the deceased are not also children of the surviving spouse. This reduction seeks to ensure that some assets will be available for the non-common children. The WESA also directly addresses situations where more than one spouse might fit its definitions.

It will be interesting to see some of the litigation arising out of the new legislation in certain provinces and, in particular in BC, regarding the division of assets acquired during the relationship, assets owned before the relationship, and the interaction of trust holdings.

Given that throughout the provinces our courts have often historically had great difficulty identifying a marriage-like relationship, new legislation may well bring with it more litigation. More recent case law has determined that many people in relationships, whether married or not married, may indeed qualify as spouses of sort, even where they do not live in the same house or even the same country. Likewise, case law has demonstrated that courts have even found spousal relationships where there has been no children, and no sexual relations. Often courts determine a spousal/spousal-like relationship on the evidence of intention of the parties.

---

Ontario still has no statutory regime for property division between common-law spouses. In light of Vanasse v. Seguin; Kerr v. Baranow, however, in which the Supreme Court of Canada affirmed the right of common-law spouses who are engaged in “joint family ventures” to share in the wealth accumulated by both spouses during the relationship, statutory common-law property division may too, eventually arrive in Ontario. The decision of Barrett v Barrett now makes Kerr v. Baranow relevant to married spouse as well as common-law spouses.

Division of Property after Death

In Ontario, within six months of the death of a married spouse, the surviving spouse is entitled, pursuant to subsections 6(1) and (2) of the Family Law Act, to make a choice between either filing an election (under section 5) and making an equalization application for a division of net family property, as described above, or taking under the Will (if there is one) or under provincial intestacy laws (if there is not) as set out in Part II of the SLRA.

If a spouse elects in favour of taking under the Will or by intestacy, the spouse will also be entitled to receive the proceeds of any life insurance policies (where named as a beneficiary), death or survivorship benefits (where named under the deceased’s pension plans or similar plans), and any property held in joint tenancy by right of survivorship. The same is not necessarily true for a surviving spouse who elects in favour of equalization: the value of these benefits may be deducted from the deceased’s NFP, thus potentially decreasing the amount of an equalization payment from the estate so that the surviving spouse does not gain an unjustified windfall.

28 Barrett v Barrett, 2014 CarswellOnt 1379
31 FLA ss. 6(6) and 6(7).
Two Ontario cases, Weatherdon-Oliver v. Oliver Estate\(^{32}\) and Laframboise v. Laframboise,\(^{33}\) have considered the converse issue: whether life insurance or pension death benefit proceeds payable to the estate should be included in the deceased’s NFP so that the estate does not gain an unjustified windfall. In both cases, the surviving spouses argued that if each, as surviving spouses, were credited with the amount of the life insurance proceeds or pre-retirement death benefits so that each did not receive an unjust windfall, should not the same kind of credit be applied against the estate where the estate is the beneficiary of these payments?

The court in both cases declined to follow this reasoning. The valuation date is defined in section 4 of the Family Law Act as the date before the day of death. Since the life insurance proceeds and pension death benefits only materialize at the time of death, they are not included in the deceased’s NFP, which is calculated a day earlier. Mitigating this, the court in Laframboise noted that while the pension death benefit payable to the estate would not be shared with the surviving spouse, the pension itself may have had a value as an asset on the valuation date that could be included in the deceased’s NFP.\(^{34}\)

Family Law Act elections pose special practical challenges. The limitation period for making an election is 6 months after the date of death. In order to make the election, the surviving spouse needs to know the relative values of the benefits to be received under the Will, versus the value of the equalization payment as calculated pursuant to sections 5 and 6 of the Family Law Act. Given that executors are expected to have their “executor’s year” to call in the assets of the estate and pay debts, and that the necessary disclosure to the surviving spouse includes not only the identity and value of the assets of the estate of the deceased, but also a Family Law Act disclosure of valuation date assets, marriage date assets, liabilities, and excluded property, it is not surprising that issues have arisen regarding extensions to the deadline to make or revoke an election.\textsuperscript{35} Even after the election is made to receive an equalization of property, the surviving spouse must still bring an application for equalization. Given the likely delay in resolving such issues, the surviving spouse may request interim payment. It is now clear that, in addition to other interim orders such as interim dependant’s support and interim distributions to beneficiaries, there is also a right to claim an advance on an equalization payment from an estate if:

\(^{34}\) Laframboise, ibid., at para. 21.

(i) there is a reasonable requirement for the funds;
(ii) there is little doubt that the person making the request will receive an equalization payment of at least that amount; and
(iii) it is just in the circumstances.\textsuperscript{36}

In British Columbia, unlike in Ontario, a division of property between spouses cannot be triggered by the death of a spouse.\textsuperscript{37} The legislature may have seen fit to leave out matrimonial property division rights for surviving spouses because the British Columbia Supreme Court already has a broad discretion to reallocate a deceased’s estate under the \textit{Wills Variation Act} in the event that a deceased spouse does not make adequate provision for the surviving spouse.\textsuperscript{38}

Alberta recently recognized the need for legislative change in order to give surviving spouses the right to claim a division of matrimonial property instead of taking the gifts left by the deceased spouse in a Will or on intestacy. Alberta amended its Wills, estates and succession laws by combining the former \textit{Wills Act}, \textit{Intestate Succession Act}, \textit{Survivorship Act}, \textit{Dependants Relief Act}, and section 47 of the \textit{Trustee Act} into the \textit{Wills and Succession Act}.\textsuperscript{39} At section 117 of this new legislation had also included proposed revisions to the \textit{Matrimonial Property Act} to implement a regime for the division of \textsuperscript{38} RSBC 1996, c 490.

\textsuperscript{37} Bill 18, s. 81; \textit{Family Law Act}, SBC 2011, c 25.
\textsuperscript{39} SA 2010, c W-12.2.
matrimonial property following the death of a spouse upon the application of the surviving spouse.\textsuperscript{40} However, it looks like these final proposed changes to the \textit{Matrimonial Property Act}, may never be made. After consultation with estate and family law practitioners in the province, the Alberta Attorney General's website now says: “Section 117 of the Wills and Succession Act was repealed on December 11, 2013 by the Statutes Repeal Act (Section 28). Further research will be conducted to explore some of the issues raised in the consultation process.”\textsuperscript{41}

3. Enforcement of Spousal Support Orders after Death

Pursuant to section 34 of the \textit{SLRA} in Ontario, a surviving spouse, whether common-law or married, may enforce a spousal support order against the estate of a deceased spouse.\textsuperscript{42} Subsection 34(4) is explicit on this point: “An order for support binds the estate of the person having the support obligation unless the order provides otherwise.” Indeed, the courts have held that support payments owed by a deceased spouse constitute a debt of the estate pursuant to subsection 34(4) of the Ontario \textit{Family Law Act}, such that estate trustees owe a fiduciary duty to the recipient of the support in the same way they owe a fiduciary duty to the beneficiaries and creditors of an estate.\textsuperscript{43}

4. Enforcement of Domestic Agreements after Death

Another potential source of rights for a separating or surviving spouse is a domestic agreement. In Ontario, Part IV of the \textit{Family Law Act} governs domestic contracts: cohabitation agreements, marriage contracts, and separation agreements.\textsuperscript{44} Similar legislation exists throughout Canada.\textsuperscript{45} The parties to such agreements have \textsuperscript{40} Ibid., s. 117.

\textsuperscript{42} RSO 1990, c S.26.
\textsuperscript{43} Re Welin Estate, 2003 CarswellOnt 2869 (Ont. S.C.J.).
\textsuperscript{44} FLA, ss. 52-54.
reasonably wide latitude to agree about the division of property and spousal support.

A domestic contract may be filed with the court under Section 35 of the Ontario FLA and the spousal support provisions can be enforced accordingly. As such, a surviving spouse can enforce a spousal support provision in a domestic contract in the same way as a support order.

Estates practitioners should be mindful of the extensive law governing the enforceability of domestic contracts, which may be set aside if such contain prohibited provisions; if a party failed to make full and frank financial disclosure; and/or if the agreement is unconscionable.

5. Dependant’s Support / Relief

In Ontario, Part V of the SLRA provides for the support of dependants in situations where a deceased person, prior to death, was providing support, or was under a legal obligation to do so, immediately before death but failed to make adequate provision for the proper support of his/her dependant on death. In such circumstances, the court is empowered to make an order, interim or permanent, as it considers adequate, to be made out of the estate of the deceased.

In the case of a surviving spouse, the spouse needs to prove that he/she was indeed a spouse, that the deceased had a legal obligation to provide support or was providing support immediately before death, and that the deceased failed to make adequate support. If successful in qualifying as a dependant, the court will consider a list of factors pursuant to s. 62 of the SLRA and common law precedent in determining the amount and duration of support.

Part V of the SLRA is a powerful tool. At first blush, it may seem to provide a remedy akin to spousal support, which is guided by, the payor’s means and the recipient’s needs. However, the Ontario Court of Appeal has clarified that in determining claims for dependant’s support under the SLRA the court must consider not just the applicant’s bare needs, or legal claims, but also the applicant’s moral or ethical claims. Arguably, the moral claim has become a legal claim.

This expands the court’s jurisdiction to make a dependant’s support order to resemble, if not mirror, the broader jurisdiction of British Columbia courts under the Wills Variation Act. Section 2 of the British Columbia Wills Variation Act provides that:

> Despite any law or statute to the contrary, if a testator dies leaving a will that does not, in the court’s opinion, make adequate provision for the proper maintenance and support of the testator’s spouse or children, the court may, in its discretion, in an action by or on behalf of the spouse or children, order that the provision that it thinks adequate, just and equitable in the circumstances be made out of the testator’s estate for the spouse or children.

Even with fairly recent developments affecting SLRA claims in the Ontario court, the British Columbia provision has a potentially broader application. The applicant in British 52 Tataryn v. Tataryn, [1994] 2 SCR 807; Cummings v Cummings, 2003 CanLII 64218 (On SC) – 2003-02-21. For an application of this particular moral claim in a situation of complex estate planning, see Morassut v. Jaczynski Estate, 2013 ONSC 2856; upheld on appeal 2015 ONSC 502 (Div. Ct): A successful business owner, was diagnosed with breast cancer and she decided to revise her estates plans in the last few months of her life. Two new Wills were produced. The first Will moved many of her assets to holding companies and left the residue of the estate to a family Trust created by the second Will. Her common-law spouse, was not provided for in either new Will, but the estate agreed to give him a $1,000,000 lump-sum payment. Her previous Will, nullified by her subsequent planning, had provided for her common law spouse a $1,000,000 payment. The estate argued that this single payment was adequate in itself and that he should not qualify for further dependant support under the SLRA. Following Tataryn v. Tataryn, however, the court found that the testatrix had “both a legal and moral obligation to continue to support him after her death.” He was awarded sole ownership of a property that he and the testatrix had built together; a yearly sum for the rest of his life; and a smaller payment every five years so that he could buy a new automobile.

---

53 Wills Variation Act, RSBC 1996, c. 490.
Columbia can be any spouse or child. The applicant need not prove that he or she was a dependant of the deceased.\(^{54}\) The definition of spouse includes both married and common-law spouses.\(^{55}\) Although there is no definition of child, the provision has been held to apply to independent adult children.\(^{56}\) There is no need to show either a legal obligation to support the person or that the deceased was actually supporting the person immediately before death.

On the other hand, Part V of the Ontario SLRA may arguably be a more powerful tool than the British Columbia Wills Variation Act in at least one important respect: In Ontario, the dependant can reach various assets of the deceased that do not form part of the estate. Certain \textit{inter vivos} transactions can be clawed back into the estate for the purpose of satisfying a support award, including gifts \textit{mortis causa}; property held jointly that passed to another person by right of survivorship; the proceeds of RRSPs and like instruments that pass to designated beneficiaries; property that the deceased settled on/in trust; the proceeds of any life insurance policy owned by the deceased; and others.\(^{57}\) Such a power does not exist in British Columbia, where Wills Variation Act claims can only be satisfied by the assets of the estate and can therefore be defeated by the deceased’s \textit{inter vivos} transfers.\(^{58}\) That said, British Columbia and Ontario claimants alike may resort to equitable claims or rely on the \textit{Fraudulent Conveyance Act}\(^{59}\) to bring assets back into the estate, but these kinds of claims can result in difficult trials.\(^{60}\)

\(^{54}\) \textit{Ibid.}, s. 2.
\(^{55}\) \textit{Ibid.}, s. 1.
\(^{57}\) SLRA, s. 72.
\(^{59}\) RSBC 1996, c 163.
6. Unjust Enrichment and Other Equitable Remedies

In the seminal decision of Kerr v. Baranow; Vanasse v. Seguin,61 the Supreme Court of Canada reviewed the law of unjust enrichment and expanded the remedies available to unmarried cohabiting spouses.62

The basic elements of an unjust enrichment claim have remained more or less unchanged since Becker v. Pettkus.63 For a plaintiff to be successful in such a claim, he/she must be able to establish the following three elements: (i) an enrichment of or benefit to the defendant by the plaintiff; (ii) a corresponding deprivation of the plaintiff; and (iii) the absence of a juristic reason for the enrichment. As well, it has been consistently held in the case law, and has been affirmed in Kerr v. Baranow; Vanasse v. Seguin, that “the courts ‘should exercise flexibility and common sense when applying equitable principles to family law issues with due sensitivity to the special circumstances that can arise in such cases.’”64

Two of the available remedies for unjust enrichment remain unchanged by the Court: the remedial constructive trust and a monetary remedy in quantum meruit (sometimes referred to as “value received” or “fee-for-service”).65 The constructive trust (proprietary) remedy is available where a monetary award would be inappropriate or insufficient and there is a link or causal connection between their contributions and the acquisition, preservation, maintenance, or improvement of the disputed property. The quantum meruit remedy is typically available where the unjust enrichment constituted the provision of unpaid services, but it tends to be the least valuable remedy.

---

64 Kerr v. Baranow, supra, note 61 at para. 34, citing Peter v. Beblow, [1993] 1 S.C.R. 980 at 997 per McLachlin J. (as she then was) and also 1023 per Cory J.
7. Joint Family Venture

The major development in Kerr v. Baranow; Vanasse v. Seguin was the endorsement of a third remedy: a monetary remedy for “value survived.” Where the spouses were engaged in a “joint family venture” and, upon breakdown of the relationship, one of the parties is left with a disproportionate share of the jointly held assets, the Court will reapportion the wealth between the parties. The Court identified the following non-exhaustive list of factors to assist in making a determination: (i) the mutual effort of the parties and whether they worked collaboratively towards common goals; (ii) economic integration of the couples’ finances; (iii) actual intent or choice of the parties to not have their economic lives intertwined, whether such is expressed or inferred; and (iv) whether the parties have given priority to the family or there is detrimental reliance on the relationship, by one or both of the parties, for the sake of the family.66

Once a spouse has proven the existence of a joint family venture, the Court will determine the award, which is not restricted to a fee-for-services approach. Rather, where it can be shown that the joint family venture in which the mutual efforts of the parties have resulted in an accumulation of wealth, the remedy “should be calculated on the basis of the share of those assets proportionate to the claimant’s contributions,”67 taking into consideration the respective contributions of the parties. The Court was clear that this calculation should not result in a “minute examination of the give and take of daily life.”68 Rather, it should remain a broad and flexible approach.

The important point for estates litigators is that the law of unjust enrichment is equally applicable to a surviving spouse against the estate of a deceased spouse as it is to a living spouse.69 There is a wealth of case law applying Kerr v. Baranow; Vanasse v. Seguin, and the cases are very much driven by the unique facts of each. The difficulty for the surviving spouse and his or her lawyer will be in proving the existence of a joint 66 Kerr v Baranow, supra note 63, at paras. 89-100.

---

67 Ibid. at para. 100.
68 Ibid. at para. 102.
family venture without the evidence of the deceased spouse. There is the strategic and practical challenge of deciding which claim or combination of claims to bring on behalf of a surviving spouse, including dependant’s support, unjust enrichment, and other equitable claims.

The Joint Family Venture Analysis now also applies to Married Spouses

Very recently the Ontario Superior Court of Justice released a family law decision, Barrett v. Barrett (discussed in detail below) dealing with the issue of who benefited from the increase in value of the matrimonial home from the date of separation to the date of trial. The Court applied the principles set out in Kerr v. Baranow\(^{70}\) to the married spouses.

8. Proprietary estoppel

Proprietary estoppel is an increasingly used tool to remedy and to protect a person who detrimentally relied on a property owner’s promises, actions, or inaction that caused the person to believe that he or she was the true owner of the property and where it would be unjust to permit the owner to later turn around and assert title.

In Schwark v. Cutting in 2010, the Ontario Court of Appeal confirmed the well-settled test for proprietary estoppel:\(^{71}\)

(i) An equity arises where:

(a) the owner of land induces, encourages or allows the claimant to believe that he has or will enjoy some right or benefit over the owner's property;
(b) in reliance upon this belief, the claimant acts to his detriment to the knowledge of the owner; and
(c) the owner then seeks to take unconscionable advantage of the claimant by denying him the right or benefit which he expected to receive.

(iv) The relief which the court may give may be either negative, in the form of an order restraining the owner from asserting his legal rights, or positive, by ordering the owner to either grant or convey to the claimant some estate, right or interest in or over his land, to pay the claimant appropriate compensation, or to act in some other way.\textsuperscript{72}

Since \textit{Schwark v. Cutting}, proprietary estoppel has been argued successfully in Ontario in other family disputes.\textsuperscript{73}

The remedy of proprietary estoppel is potentially a powerful tool that can be used to reclaim a proprietary interest in certain property after death in instances where such an interest was not reflected in a will. Estate litigants should be aware of this potential avenue of legal recourse and plead it in appropriate cases. Recent decisions are addressed below.

\textbf{9. Challenges to Joint Title}

Spouse/partners may find themselves defending challenges to property passing to them by right of survivorship. In remarriage and re-partnership scenarios, expectant heirs often have an incentive to try to prevent the deceased’s portion of a jointly held asset from passing by right of survivorship to the surviving spouse.

In the recent case of \textit{Hansen v. Hansen Estate}, the Ontario Court of Appeal clarified the law with respect to the severance of joint tenancies.\textsuperscript{74} In particular, the court clarified the third of the “three rules” of when a joint tenancy will be severed. The first rule provides that a joint tenancy can be severed by a unilateral act affecting title, such as selling or encumbering the interest. The second rule provides that the parties may explicitly agree to sever the joint title. Both of these rules can be used effectively for planning purposes.

\textsuperscript{72} \textit{Ibid.} at para. 23.
\textsuperscript{73} See for example \textit{Spadafora v. Gabriele} 2011 ONSC 6686.

The third rule provides that a joint tenancy will be severed by something less than an explicit act of severance. Specifically, joint title will be severed by “any course of dealing sufficient to intimate that the interests of all were mutually treated as constituting a tenancy in common.” The Court held that this rule operates in equity. It is meant to prevent the title passing by way of survivorship when to do so would cause an injustice. This rule does not require a specific act or any explicit agreement. What the party asserting severance must prove is that the co-owners have all acted as though their respective shares in the property were no longer an indivisible, unified whole.

Cautionary Planning Tips – Jointly Held Assets

Joint tenancy has been described to be a useful estate-planning tool in avoiding the administrative hassle and estate administration taxes associated with probate, but it is difficult to suggest, in light of the difficulties, that joint tenancy is a good or effective means of planning. Indeed, an extraordinary amount of litigation arises respecting jointly held assets and survivorship rights perhaps planning for probate, as opposed to around probate is the best approach. This is an area riddled with disputes about whether joint title was severed by a mutual course of conduct. It is important to remember that severance of joint title under the third rule requires a mutual course of conduct. Therefore, if only one of the joint owners maintains that the property is held in joint tenancy, the property will remain so until the other owner carries out a unilateral act of severance on title. When a property is to be held in joint tenancy, particularly in complex family situations, it is worth considering whether the joint owner carrying out the estate plan should sign a written acknowledgement that the property is to be held in joint tenancy.

75 Ibid. at para. 34.
76 Ibid. at para. 35.
77 Hansen, supra. at para. 39.
10. Predatory Marriages

Civil marriages are solemnized with increasing frequency under circumstances where one party to the marriage is incapable of understanding, appreciating, and formulating a choice to marry—perhaps because they are afflicted with one of the many ailments of older adults such as dementia, incapacity, Alzheimer’s, cognitive disorders and other conditions involving reduced functioning and capability.

Unscrupulous opportunists too often get away with preying upon those older adults with diminished reasoning ability purely for financial profit. An appropriate moniker for this type of relationship is that of the ‘predatory marriage’. This is not a term that is in common use. However, given that marriage brings with it a wide range of property and financial entitlements, it does effectively capture the situation where one person marries another of limited capacity solely in the pursuit of these advantages.

The problem with predatory marriages is that they are not easily challenged. The current standard for determining requisite “capacity to marry” is anything but a rigorous one. Currently, in Canadian law, in order to enter into a marriage that cannot be subsequently voided or declared a nullity, there must be a minimal understanding of the nature of the contract of marriage. No party is required to understand all of the consequences of marriage and does not require a high degree of intelligence. This means that capacity is likely found, even in the most obvious cases of exploitation, and, consequently, that predatory and exploitative marriages are more likely to withstand challenge.

III. A REVIEW OF NOTABLE ESTATE DECISIONS ARISING OUT OF (RE) PARTNERSHIPS

Intestate Succession and Unjust Enrichment – ON - Re York Estate

The case of Re York Estate provides an example of a situation in which a remarriage

---

78 1998 CarswellOnt 3947 (Gen Div).
that takes place not long before the death of the testator works a significant disadvantage to the children of the deceased who, but for the remarriage, would have stood to inherit the entirety of their parent's estate.

The deceased's first wife died and one month later, the deceased executed a new Will leaving the residue of his estate to his children in equal shares. Just over a year later, the deceased remarried. One month after that, he died.

It is not clear whether the deceased already had marriage in mind when he made his new Will, that is, whether he intended to get married and still leave his estate to his children. In any event, this was not a Will made “in contemplation of marriage,” and was therefore revoked by the marriage. The deceased's estate was of moderate size, consisting of farm property, RRSPs, and investments totalling $476,574. The evidence was clear that the substantial amount of money the deceased amassed during his lifetime “was due to his extremely frugal lifestyle and the fact that he did all repairs necessary on his farm property, and that the children ran the significant operation of the farm to allow [the deceased] to continue with a full-time job.”

Despite the short time that the deceased and his second wife were married, the Court disagreed with the proposal that it had discretion to deviate from the distribution formula for intestacy as set out in section 45 of the SLRA as to the $200,000 preferential share.

The Court ordered the farm to be transferred to the surviving spouse as part of her distributive/preferential share, deducting half the costs of repairing it on the basis that the repairs would significantly benefit the wife as the ultimate owner of the property. A number of other items were deemed to be received by the wife as part of her distributive share. The Court did not comment on whether the application of section 45 resulted in any injustice, but the Court’s statement at paragraph 10 exposes how a straightforward application of the provision does not always bear a fair result:

   The evidence before me is that [the deceased] and his six children, when he was married to [his first wife], lived for almost 30 years on this farm property on Bleeks Road. The children are, needless to say, very emotionally attached to the farm and the property, because that is where they were brought up and they spent many hours working on the farm. It is clearly evident from three of the children who testified before me, […] that this whole issue of the circumstances they find themselves in now with their father’s second wife is difficult for them, and every effort at trying to resolve the property issues between them and [his second wife] have failed.80

---

70 Ibid. at par. 6.

Notably, in the end, the children were granted $10,000 each in quantum meruit for their work on the farm when growing up.81

This litigation resulted despite the perfectly clear effect of the rules of intestate succession under Part III of the SLRA. One has to wonder at the tenacity of the children’s quixotic mission to bring their unlikely application to trial. Estate litigators are well aware of the strong emotional forces that drive family litigation, even against long odds. This case seemingly represents a failure to plan, whether by making a new Will to benefit the children or to confirm that the deceased wished to actually benefit his new wife almost exclusively. However, the lawyer who may have advised the deceased on his Will shortly after his first wife died may have had no opportunity to assist this client in dealing with the consequences of the new marriage except to remind the client in his reporting letter that he would need a new Will if and when he remaries.

Unless there is a change to the laws of intestate succession and/or the rule that a Will is revoked by marriage, as recently seen in Alberta, British Columbia, and New Brunswick, these cases will surely continue.

80 Ibid. at para. 10.
81 Ibid. at paras. 37-38.
Intestate Succession and Unjust Enrichment – ON – Prelorentzos v. Havaris

In this case, the deceased died intestate with a modest estate, but with both a married and common-law spouse.\(^{82}\) He had separated from his wife 11 years before his death but they had not divorced. A year or two after his separation, a woman, Helen, moved into the deceased’s home and continued to reside with him until his death. It was unclear whether the relationship was “platonic or conjugal” but it was agreed that they travelled together, went to family gatherings together, and shared all parts of the house. The children of the deceased testified it was a brother/sister relationship, that they had separate sleeping arrangements and that their father wanted to reconcile with their mother.\(^{83}\) Helen testified that they were in a romantic relationship, shared a bed, expenses and chores around the house.

Upon his death, the wife sought entitlement to the entire estate because its value was less than the preferential share of $200,000.00. Helen, the common law spouse, sought dependant’s relief from the estate and a constructive trust in relation to the house in which she had lived with the deceased.

Grace J. reviewed the limited evidence that was presented. Helen failed to produce any income tax returns, financial statements, etc. to support her dependant support claim and chose instead to give her evidence through oral testimony. She was also “selective” in her disclosure and production of the deceased’s bank account records and her actions related to the accounts.\(^{84}\) However, Grace J. concluded that “while [the deceased] may have equivocated or even been unhappy, by a very thin margin I am satisfied that [Helen] was his spouse within the meaning of s.57 of the SLRA at the time of [his] death”\(^{85}\) and that Helen was a dependant and ordered a lump sum dependant support payment of $30,000.00, which was “generous but fair”.

With respect to the unjust enrichment / constructive trust claim, Grace J. concluded that Helen’s contribution of money and labour to the property was very small and that the

\(^{82}\) 2015 ONSC 2844.
\(^{83}\) 2015 ONSC 2844 at paras 26-46.
\(^{84}\) 2015 ONSC 2844 at para 262.
\(^{85}\) 2015 ONSC 2844 at para.101.
deceased had largely undertaken the labour, repairs, maintenance and renovations of the house. He had also made all mortgage payments. Grace J. was “unable to find enrichment, a deprivation or the absence of a juristic reason” and that her unjust enrichment claim lacked evidentiary support.

Subject to the lump sum payment to Helen, the wife was entitled to her preferential share of the estate pursuant to the intestacy provisions of the SLRA.

Intestate Succession – NB - Stanley Mutual Insurance Co. v. Shepherd

Even where the deceased intends his entire estate to pass to his wife of 28 years and has no reasonable expectation of claims against his estate, an intestacy can cause serious problems. In Stanley, the deceased died intestate. He had children from a previous relationship, but he had no contact with these children and in fact did not even know where they were located or if they were alive. The widow disclosed these facts to the court, which held that she must take extraordinary steps to locate the children and give them an opportunity to be heard.

The estate-planning lesson in this case must be a reminder that simple families on the surface may in fact be complex families on closer inspection.

Intestate Succession – SK - Cronan v. Cronan Estate

The reasons for judgment in this Saskatchewan case begin with the sentence: “The only thing more peculiar than modern relationships are the laws which attempt to define them.”

The main issue was whether the deceased’s second spouse fell within the definition of “spouse” for purposes of the Saskatchewan Intestate Succession Act, Pension Benefits Act, and Dependants’ Relief Act, each of which has a different definition of “spouse.” The first defines spouse as a person who is legally married or cohabiting with the deceased spouse continuously for no less than two years and has so cohabited within the last two years. The second defines spouse as a person married to the member or cohabiting with the member for at least a year prior to the relevant time. The third defines spouse as a person who lived continuously for not less than two years with the deceased or in a relationship of some permanence if they are parent of a child.

---

87 2010 SKQB 159.

In this case, the deceased died intestate. He committed suicide after a lifelong battle with depression. He had been married and had three children with his first wife. He divorced and was then married to his second wife, with whom he had two children. He then divorced his second wife. The evidence, however, was that he resumed a common-law relationship with his second wife after the divorce.

In determining the relationship, the court, following the framework set out in the Ontario decision in Molodowich v. Penttinen, the leading case on determining whether two individuals are cohabiting in a conjugal relationship. The second wife’s evidence was that they lived together, shared a bedroom, raised their children together, held themselves out to the community as a couple, and that several periods of separation between them were brief and always reconciled. The children of the deceased’s first marriage gave evidence, which was accepted, that during these periods of separation the deceased would often return to his first wife, including even briefly entering into an engagement with her. They argued that this amounted to an intention on the part of the deceased not to continue cohabitation in a conjugal relationship with the second wife.

The Court found that the second wife met the definition of the spouse under all of the statutes. As a result, the entire value of the small estate went to the second wife, and the children from the first marriage received nothing.

As a case about a person who died intestate, having never had a will, this is obviously a case about the failure to plan. It is also a case involving a person afflicted with depression and prone to an unstable lifestyle. He had maintained relationships with two former spouses and children of the first spouse. If he had planned, it seems likely that he would have chosen to benefit his children from each, to some extent.

---

Revocation of a Will on Marriage – AB – Fuchs v. Fuchs

The Alberta Court of Queen’s Bench declared that a Will executed on June 22, 1999 was a valid will drafted in contemplation of a marriage which took place on April 20, 2001 notwithstanding that the Will failed to expressly indicate that it was made in contemplation of marriage. The Court focused on the evidence of the testator’s true intentions at the time he executed the Will.

The deceased had advertised for a wife in a German newspaper in 1998. He began correspondence with Ms. Lippka and when she visited Canada that same year he proposed. The deceased was not able to marry at the time, as his divorce from his previous spouse was not finalized. On June 22, 1999 the deceased executed his Will, his divorce was granted on January 20, 2000, and the parties married on April 20, 2001. The deceased’s will appointed “my friend, Barbara Lippka” as executor and directed that the residue, after paying debts, was to be transferred “to my friend, Barbara Lippka, if she survives me.” There was no declaration that it was in contemplation of marriage and no evidence was provided by the solicitor who drafted the will.

The deceased died on February 8, 2012, notably just 7 days after the new Alberta Wills and Succession Act (the New Act) came into effect. Section 8 of the New Act states that the previous legislation, the Wills Act, R.S.A. 2000, c. W-12 (the Old Act) applies if the Will was executed during the time of the Old Act. However, Section 8 of the New Act also states that certain sections of the New Act applied if the testator died after the New Act came into force. One of those sections provided that:

> a “will must be interpreted in a manner that gives effect to the intent of the testator” and that a Court may rectify a will “that does not reflect the testator’s intentions because of. . .a misunderstanding of, or failure to give effect to, the testator’s instructions by the person who prepared the will.”

---

89 2013 ABQB 78.
If it was found that the Will was revoked and the deceased was intestate the wife would be entitled to only 50 percent of the Estate under the legislation instead of the entirety of the residue of his estate as set out in his Will.\(^90\)

Justice Rooke observed that while there was no independent evidence with respect to the intention of the deceased, it was clear that: the deceased and Ms. Lippka were living together at the time he executed his Will, he could not call her his “spouse” because he was still married, and that the word “friend” was an accurate and logical description. Justice Rooke also concluded that the Will was clearly made in contemplation of marriage based on the “clear and convincing evidence” in Ms. Lippka’s affidavit. The lack of a declaration saying so was impliedly due to the misunderstanding or error of his lawyer. There was no mention in the case as to why the lawyer did not provide evidence in this matter, although Justice Rooke stated that it would have been “useful”. The Will was declared valid and the wife inherited under the Will:

The will of the Deceased of June 23, 1999 was clearly made in the contemplation of marriage but it does not contain a declaration saying so impliedly due to the misunderstanding or error of his lawyer. Having regard to the provisions of the New Act and the ability to consider, by extrinsic evidence, the circumstances surrounding the execution of the will and all of the other circumstances, it is clear that it was made in contemplation of marriage, and the requirements of s.39(1) of the New Act regarding why that intention was not expressed in the will have been satisfied. In the result, under the provisions of the New Act, that requires the Court to give effect to the intention of the testator, and, notwithstanding the provisions of s.17 of the Old Act, s.39 is invoked to rectify the will to provide specifically (as indicated (supra)) that it is in contemplation of marriage. Thus, Mrs. Fuchs, his spouse, inherits under the Deceased’s will.\(^91\)

Enforcement of Separation Agreement – ON - Re Welin Estate\(^92\)

This case involved a dispute over the failure of the estate trustee, who was the spouse of the deceased at the time of death, to make spousal support payments to his former spouse pursuant to a separation agreement. This case involved a motion brought by one of the adult sons of the deceased (also a residual beneficiary of the deceased’s

---

\(^90\) Fuchs v. Fuchs 2013 ABQB 78 at para. 37.
\(^91\) 2013 ABQB 78 at para. 35.
\(^92\) 2003 CarswellOnt 2869 (Ont. S.C.J.).
estate) to remove the deceased’s second surviving spouse (Spouse #2), Barbara Welin, as the executor/trustee of the estate on the basis of conflict of interest. As the monthly support payments owed to the deceased’s first surviving spouse (Spouse #1), Diana Welin, constituted a debt against the estate pursuant to subsection 34(4) of the FLA, and as Spouse #2 had terminated the payments after death, the Court found that Spouse #2 had failed to meet her trustee and fiduciary duties and obligations to pay all of the debts of the estate, and ordered that Spouse #2 be removed as executor.

This case represents a typical, yet avoidable, problem in planning. It is quite common for separated spouses to appoint their new partners as executors and trustees of their estate. The testator was well aware of the adversity in the interests and, probably, dispositions of his current and former spouses. While the testator may hope that the current spouse will tread carefully when administering his estate and respect competing spousal support obligations, it may be better to avoid appointing the spouse altogether. This would protect not only the former spouse and the estate, but also the executor spouse, who could be exposed to personal liability for defeating the interests of creditors of the estate.

Enforcement of Domestic Contract – ON – McCain v. McCain

While not an estate case, McCain v. McCain is instructive on the enforcement of domestic contracts. It concerns a wealthy businessman, Wallace McCain, who told his adult children that he required all of them to sign domestic contracts with their spouses to protect the extensive assets he wanted to pass on to his children either in his lifetime or on his death. If his children refused, he would disown them. Accordingly, his son Michael presented his wife of 16 years (at the time) with a marriage contract. The contract was drafted by the husband’s family law lawyer who also arranged for the wife to meet with an independent family law lawyer for legal advice. Under the contract, should the parties separate or the husband predecease her, the wife waived all of her

---

93 Ibid. at para. 8.
94 2012 ONSC 7344.
property rights, keeping only the assets in her name, and waived her right to an equalization claim under the Family Law Act.

Fourteen years after signing the contract the couple sought a divorce. In the intervening years between the execution of the contract and the divorce, the husband’s wealth grew significantly, while the assets solely in the wife’s name only represented a very small portion of that wealth. At dispute in the divorce proceeding was, among other things, the validity of the marriage contract. The wife argued that the terms of the contract were “unconscionable” and did “not comply with the overall objectives of the Divorce Act.” She claimed she did not understand what she was giving up by signing the contract, that the husband’s financial disclosure under the contract was insufficient and that her husband took advantage of her “vulnerability and she entered into the contract under duress”.

Justice Greer reviewed and applied the relevant case law, including the two part test in Miglin v. Miglin. The first part of the test required the Court to look at the circumstances in which the agreement was negotiated and see whether it should be discounted in those circumstances. The second part requires the court to assess whether the agreement still reflects the original intention of the parties and the extent to which it is still in compliance with the objectives of the Divorce Act.

In analysing the circumstances under which the wife signed the contract, Justice Greer asked: “How could the Wife possibly take on the burden of not signing the contract for her own personal gain, knowing that her Husband’s father would cut her Husband out of receiving his inheritance?” Her Honour concluded that the contract:

was not acceptable in a long term marriage, that went on for another 15 years after the [c]ontract was signed. There were no projections of what the Husband would be earning in the future. There were no projections of lifestyle changes, which took place as the years went on . . . An agreement, which may have appeared as fair to the Husband when it was signed, can through time become unconscionable. In my view this is what happened, and this leaves the Wife with very little. The circumstances regarding its execution, the improvident result for the Wife and the extent of the Husband’s now wealth, are sufficient to have the spousal support provision of the contract set aside.

---

All sections of the marriage contract respecting spousal support were severed from the balance of the contract and the wife was awarded both interim and retroactive spousal support.

Joint Family Venture – Married Spouses – ON – Barrett v. Barrett

Barrett v. Barrett involves divorce proceedings between a wife and husband who separated in 2008 after 33 years of marriage. A trial was held in the divorce proceedings in January 2014. According to both parties’ evidence, the matrimonial home was in the wife’s name alone in order to protect it from the husband’s creditors from his business ventures.

Post separation the wife maintained the home and paid all expenses including the mortgage and home equity line of credit payments. On two occasions, post-separation, the wife arranged for refinancing of the home, resulting in $30,000 in total being paid to the wife. While there was no written evidence of these re-financings, the husband testified that he had to sign documents to permit the transactions. He was not a debtor, nor a guarantor for these secured debts.

At trial, the husband argued that he had an interest in the increase in the value of the house post separation. He argued that under the principles set out in Kerr v. Baranow, the wife was unjustly enriched to his detriment, in that he contributed to the home post separation by signing the papers allowing the wife to refinance the home. The wife argued that under the Family Law Act, since the home was her asset, any increase in the value post separation is her asset alone. She was only required to account for the increase in value from the date she first took ownership until the date of separation.

---

97 McCain v. McCain, 2012 ONSC 7344 at paras. 87-88.
99 2014 ONSC 857.

Justice Trimble observed that since Kerr, the courts have looked at the issue of the division of unevenly accumulated wealth through the analysis of what is referred to as a “joint family venture”. In other words, where the contribution of each party is to a common enterprise that assisted in sustaining the parties’ relationship, albeit not necessarily in equal measure, the effort of both parties is seen as a joint family venture and the wealth created is part of the fruit of the union and should be divided according to the relative contribution.¹⁰⁰ Trimble J. observed that the actual intentions of the parties must be given considerable weight. While Kerr applies to situations where spouses are not married, Trimble J. held that “it applies equally to the unequal accumulation of wealth in a marriage, to the extent that the Family Law Act does not apply – i.e., to the unequal accumulation of wealth post separation.”¹⁰¹

The Court found that the proper approach (following Kerr v. Baranow) to deal with the issue of whether or not the husband had any interest in the matrimonial home post-separation is “not one of constructive trust, but rather one of unjust enrichment and the remedy, if any, a monetary one.”¹⁰² Justice Trimble went on to find that:

> Whether I use the three step approach (benefit, corresponding detriment and no juridical reason to deprive) or the joint family venture analysis [per Kerr], I come to the same conclusion. On all the evidence I find that the husband has no interest, and intended to keep no interest in the family home post separation, and therefore, the wife was not unjustly enriched. The onus to establish that the wife was unjustly enriched is with the husband. He fails to discharge this onus.¹⁰³

The Court concluded firstly that there was no doubt that the wife received a benefit from having the home in her name and as a title holder, yet, she alone enjoyed the increased value of the home since separation. Secondly, the husband did not suffer a corresponding detriment by signing off on the refinancing of $30,000.00. There was no evidence that he “gave something up” as he claimed. Thirdly, there was a juristic reason for allowing the benefit to stay with the wife. Both parties intended that the home would be in the wife’s name to protect it from creditors. There was no intention for the husband to maintain any ownership (legal, equitable or beneficial) in the house.\textsuperscript{104}

Under the joint family venture multi-factorial analysis, Trimble J., found that it was the specific intention that the home would be outside the joint family venture, while all other assets were intended to fall within the joint family venture.\textsuperscript{105}

Equalization and Unjust Enrichment – ON – Martin v. Sansome

The recent Ontario Court of Appeal case of Martin v. Sansome\textsuperscript{106} looked at the interplay between an unjust enrichment claim and equalization under the Family Law Act between married spouses. The husband was involved in some bad business ventures which put him in bankruptcy. His parents offered to sell him the family farm. The day before the farm deal was to close the husband told his wife that her name would not be on the property and asked her to sign a domestic contract relinquishing her rights to the farm and home.

Later, after 10 years of marriage (and 10 previous years of common law cohabitation) they sought a divorce. At trial, the wife sought to set aside the domestic contract and sought a constructive trust interest in the farm as remedy for her unjust enrichment claim.

Applying Kerr v. Baranow, the trial judge set aside the domestic contract and awarded the wife a one half interest in the farm under constructive trust.

\textsuperscript{104} [2014] ONSC 857 at paras. 50-51.
\textsuperscript{105} [2014] ONSC 857 at para. 52.
\textsuperscript{106} 2014 ONCA 14.
However, the Ontario Court of Appeal disagreed, and set aside the wife’s one-half interest in the farm. The Court determined that the proper process was to determine ownership first, and when there is a claim for constructive trust, the applicant must prove that an ownership interest is more appropriate than monetary damages (which the applicant did not do in this case). On the facts of this case the Court concluded that a monetary payment under the FLA’s equalization scheme would adequately compensate the applicant.

Pre-Marital Agreements and Survivorship Rights – ON - Caron v Rowe

In Caron v Rowe, Ms. Caron brought an application seeking a declaration that as a surviving spouse, she was the sole beneficiary of the entirety of the estate of her husband Mr. Rowe.

The Deceased signed a Will dated May 9, 2009, leaving the entirety of his estate to his parents. Four months later, the Applicant and the Deceased entered into a Pre-Marital Agreement and subsequently married on September 4, 2009. The Deceased died 2 years later, on November 12, 2011.

The Applicant applied to be appointed as the Estate Trustee Without a Will. The Respondents were the Deceased’s mother and brothers, who filed a Notice of Objection to her appointment as the Estate Trustee Without a Will.

Subsequently, on February 23, 2012, the Applicant filed an election under the Family Law Act, to receive her net family property entitlement as a spouse and asked for a declaration under Part II of the SLRA as the sole intestate heir of the Estate.

108 Ibid
The Applicant asserted that the May 2009 Will was revoked upon marriage pursuant to section 16 of the SLRA.

The Respondents asserted that the Applicant had no claim to the Deceased’s home as she waived the right to make any claim to the home in the Pre-Marital Agreement, and as such that part of the Estate falls to the surviving parent.

The judge disposing of the matter found that the Pre-Marital Agreement was a binding contract and relied on Stern v Sheps Estate¹⁰⁹ standing for the proposition that parties can contract themselves out of the benefits of otherwise governing legislation as long as they are clearly aware of their respective rights. As such, the Applicant was entitled to contract out of the benefits that would fall pursuant to section 44 of the SLRA.

It was the Respondents’ position that the Applicant, by entering into the Pre-Marital Agreement which provided for the home remaining in Paul’s estate, was not entitled to the home because she had contracted out of her rights under the Succession Law Reform Act. The Applicant’s contended that she did not specifically waive her rights under the SLRA.¹¹⁰

The court found that Ms. Caron was not relinquishing her rights as a spouse under the SLRA in the Pre-Marital Agreement¹¹¹. While Ms. Caron had a right to contract out of her entitlement under the SLRA, it was not satisfied that she did so and as such appointed the Applicant as the Estate Trustee Without a Will, and declared that as the surviving spouse she was the sole beneficiary of the entirety of the Estate.

¹¹¹ Caron v Rowe, 2013 ONSC 863, para 26
Dependant’s Support – Spouse – ON - Lalonde v. Moore\textsuperscript{112}

A dispute arose between the common-law partner of the deceased, Ms. Lalonde, and the deceased’s children from a previous marriage over whether or not Ms. Lalonde met the definition of “spouse” under the SLRA and therefore was entitled to dependant’s support.

“Spouse” as defined in the SLRA, includes “two persons who, [. . .] are not married to each other and have cohabited...continuously for a period of not less than three years”.\textsuperscript{113} Under the SLRA, “cohabit” means “to live together in a conjugal relationship, whether within or outside marriage”.\textsuperscript{114}

According to Ms. Lalonde, she commenced co-habiting with the deceased as of May 30, 2009 and continued to co-habit with him until his death in August, 2012. Ms. Lalonde met the deceased in 2006 when she was living in Montreal and the deceased was living in Ontario. They would see each other weekly or bi-weekly. In May of 2009 Ms. Lalonde cancelled the lease on her apartment in Montreal and moved all of her belongings to the deceased’s home. She also applied for an Ontario driver’s license.

The deceased’s children, the respondents, argued that Ms. Lalonde had not cohabited with their father in a conjugal relationship for the required three years. They claimed that Ms. Lalonde did not cohabit with the deceased until October or November of 2010. The children argued that when Ms. Lalonde moved her belongings in May of 2009 that she was simply storing her furniture with their father. They also relied on cellphone, telephone and facsimile records to argue that Ms. Lalonde was actually living and working in Montreal until late 2010 and not with their father.

Justice Linhares de Sousa concluded that based on the evidence, and on the balance of probabilities, that Ms. Lalonde had cohabited continuously with the deceased from

\textsuperscript{112} Lalonde v. Moore 2013 ONSC 739
\textsuperscript{113} Lalonde v. Moore 2013 ONSC 739 at paras. 1,10 and 11.
\textsuperscript{114} Lalonde v. Moore, 2013 ONSC 739 at para. 11.
May or June of 2009 until his death in 2012 and therefore was a “spouse” under the SLRA and entitled to dependant support.

The Court relied on the fact that she moved all of her belongings to Ontario, terminated her Montreal lease, applied for an Ontario driver’s licence, terminated her employment in Montreal, changed her bank account address to Ontario, and that she shared expenses with the deceased. However, the most persuasive evidence for the Court was a document sent to the Canada Revenue Agency:

> Unfortunately, the deceased is not able to shed light on the question before the Court. However, there is one document in which the deceased, along with Ms. Lalonde made an official declaration as to how long Ms. Lalonde and he cohabited. This was...the document dated September 12, 2011 sent to the Canada Revenue Agency, declaring that he and Ms. Lalonde had been living “as a common law couple since July 2009”...I find this document, along with all the other evidence...very persuasive in coming to my decision that the cohabitation commenced in the months of May or June of 2009. Firstly, it is the only evidence that comes from the deceased. Secondly, it is consistent with much of the other evidence concerning Ms. Lalonde’s history of the relationship...]

Therefore, evidence that can be directly linked to the deceased and his or her intention or confirmation of the cohabitation may be persuasive for the Court.

Dependant’s Support – ON - *Lukic v. Zaban

This was a motion for interim support\(^{116}\) and turned mainly on whether the applicant was a spouse of the deceased. In the re-partnerships of older people, relationships may not be as formalized and publicly acknowledged as relationships among younger people. Therefore, the question sometimes arises about whether the relationship was one between spouses, roommates, or friends.

In this application for interim dependant’s support, which was somewhat unusually \(^{115}\) Lalonde v. Moore, 2013 ONSC 739 at paras. 75-76.

\(^{116}\) Lukic v. Zaban, 2012 CarswellOnt 14165, 2012 ONSC 6078 (Master).
heard by a Master, the deceased was a successful businessman and widower. He and his late wife, who died in 2002, had four children together. In 2005, he was disabled in a serious car accident. Two years later, he met the applicant in a grocery store. They apparently struck up a friendship, which resulted in the deceased financing the applicant’s business. However, the applicant’s home and business were in Gatineau, Quebec, while the deceased lived in Picton, Ontario. The applicant eventually moved her business to Picton. She maintained an apartment for some time, but lived in the deceased’s home for about 10 months. The deceased bought the applicant a car and let her use his credit cards.

The main question in the case was whether the applicant satisfied the definition of “spouse,” which was a threshold question for any order of support. To determine whether the applicant was a spouse, Master MacLeod applied the factors in Molodowich v. Pentinnen: “In simplest terms the characteristics of a conjugal relationship include ‘shared shelter, sexual and personal behaviour, services, social activities, economic support and children, as well as the societal perception of the couple.’ These elements may be present in varying degrees and not all need be present for the relationship to be found to be conjugal.”

Although the relationship lasted for over three years, the court was not convinced that the parties had cohabited in a conjugal relationship for that time. Several facts contributed to this finding. The deceased’s capacity and ability to care for himself was in steady decline, making him dependent on caregivers. His neighbours, friends, children and personal care workers were not aware of any intimate relationship. There was no evidence of a sexual or romantic relationship. The court found that there were some indicators of a close relationship, including the provision of financial support and a short term sharing of shelter, but that the evidence as a whole was equivocal, uncorroborated, and highly contested. There was therefore no prima facie claim for interim dependants’ support.
Interestingly, the applicant was successful in obtaining an order for the interim preservation of the vehicle that the deceased had given her to drive but that his estate trustees had repossessed from the applicant. The court held that there was a strong prima facie claim that it had been a gift.

This case may highlight the desirability of taking active steps in the course of estate planning to clarify the status of a relationship, either with the potential claimant or with the world at large. By fostering a secretive and dependant relationship, the deceased assured his estate trustees and beneficiaries difficulty in administering the estate.

Dependant’s Support – Funding Order - ON - Kalman v. Pick

The 75-year-old applicant sought, inter alia, dependant’s support from the estate of her common-law partner of 23 years.¹¹⁷ The respondent estate trustees were the deceased’s children of his first relationship, and the primary beneficiaries of his estate valued at $1.8 million. The applicant had been completely financially dependant on the deceased.

On consent, at an interim motion, the applicant received a monthly payment of “interim interim support,” a non-dissipation order in respect of the Estate, and a return date in three months’ time.

The only issue before Justice C. Brown on that January 2013 return date was the Applicant’s request that the estate provide her with a lump-sum interim support payment to cover her legal fees and disbursements. This type of funding order had not previously been reported as granted in SLRA claims.

Justice Brown accepted the applicant’s evidence of financial need and legal fees incurred and observed that, in the absence of adequate interim support, “…the Applicant’s ability to pursue her meritorious claim would be prejudiced or would depend on the generosity of her counsel.”¹¹⁸

In ordering the estate to pay the applicant a lump-sum interim support of $60,000 for her legal costs and disbursements and expert’s retainer, Justice Brown cited the provision of such funding orders in matrimonial, commercial, and constitutional matters and applied the Supreme Court of Canada’s criteria for such exercises of equitable jurisdiction as to costs.¹¹⁹ Justice Brown also relied on interim costs awards granted in the context of estates and trusts matters.¹²⁰

Subsequently, Justice McEwen ordered a further interim support payment in the amount of $25,000 on a without prejudice basis.¹²¹

This case represents a much needed precedent in providing a means for dependants to fund a viable claim against an estate where having met the statutory test under the legislation – the SLRA – and the dependant has not been provided adequate or proper support by the deceased person. Often in such a case the dependant is prejudiced in prosecuting a meritorious claim due to unaffordability.

Recently in Dagg v. Cameron (discussed below) a lump sum payment of $30,000 was ordered “to maintain the litigation” in a dependant support application.¹²²

Dependant’s Support – Interim Support - ON - Blair v. Allair Estate(Cooke)
The case¹²³ involved a motion for interim support under the SLRA made by one of the deceased’s two long-term partners in an unconventional relationship. The Court found that, on the evidence, both of the deceased’s partners met the definition of “spouse” in the SLRA and could establish claims for support.

¹¹⁸ Ibid at para. 11
¹²⁰ Kraus v. Valentini Estate, 1993 CarswellOnt 2128, 1993 OJ No 3276 (Ont Gen Div); Zhao v Ismail Estate (trustee of), 2006 CarswellOnt 8411, 29 ETR (3d) 315; Perkovic v Marion Estate, 2008 CarswellOnt 5931 (SCJ).
¹²¹ 2014 ONSC 2362.
¹²² 2015 ONSC 2597
¹²³ 2011 ONSC 498
Counsel for the estate trustee, being the other spouse, argued that since the relationships that the deceased had with both women were virtually the same, the Court should not make any finding of entitlement to support on the interim motion because it would preclude the second spouse/estate trustee from claiming support or claiming that she was in fact the spouse of the deceased. It was also suggested that a ruling in favour of the applicant would be tantamount to finding that the deceased was in a “bigamous” relationship. The Court rejected this argument, stating that it failed to see “how ordering support for a dependant would preclude the right to support by another dependant even if it is tantamount to a finding that both of the ‘dependants’ were ‘spouses’ and thus the deceased was living in a ‘bigamous’ relationship.” The Court further noted that the relationship was not “bigamous,” as neither of the spouses were legally married to the deceased.

In the result, the Court found that the moving-party spouse had overcome the evidentiary hurdle required to advance a claim for support, having provided “credible evidence from which one could rationally conclude that the applicant could establish...(her)...claim for support,” and awarded her $1,500 per month in support.

It is not clear from the reasons whether the deceased left a Will. Assuming that the deceased did leave a Will and did not make adequate provision for support of the claimant spouse in the Will, the estate-planning lesson in this case seems to be that one must carefully explore the client’s relationships. If the deceased in this case had simply been asked if he were married to, living with, or supporting someone, he might not have identified one or the other of the partners that the court found on this interim motion that he maintained households with.

---

124 Blair, supra. at para. 16.
125 Ibid. at para. 19.
Dependant’s Support – Section 72 Assets – ON - Dagg v Cameron

The deceased had separated from his wife of 12 years. They had two children. As part of a consent temporary order on spousal and child support the deceased agreed to maintain his estranged wife as irrevocable beneficiary on any life insurance policy.

Shortly after leaving his wife, the deceased commenced a new relationship. His new partner became pregnant and the two began living together. Four months later the deceased was diagnosed with pancreatic cancer. Within days of the diagnosis the deceased changed his life insurance designation. His new partner was now entitled to 56.3 per cent and his wife and children were to receive the remaining 46.3 per cent. The wife immediately obtained an urgent order requiring the life insurance company to restore the beneficiary designation. The deceased died three days later, within a month of his diagnosis, at the age of 48. His partner was 8 months pregnant with his child.

While the partner was the sole beneficiary of the deceased’s will, she brought an application for dependant support under the SLRA upon behalf of her son and herself. She also sought to recover any dependant support from the insurance policy pursuant to section 72(1)(f) of the SLRA which states: “any amount payable under a policy of insurance effect on the life of the deceased, and owned by him or her” is available for satisfaction of dependant support claims. The wife opposed the application arguing that the partner was not a dependent under the SLRA as they had only co-habited for four months at the time of his death and they were not parents to a child as the child was born after his death. Also, she argued that the insurance money was not available under section 72 as the deceased did not “own” the policy as he had designated her as the irrevocable beneficiary.

Bale J., found that the deceased had two spouses: his wife, from whom he was separated, and his partner with whom he had conceived a child. Section 1(1) of the SLRA defines a “child” as including a child conceived before, and born alive after, the parent’s death. The partner was also a dependant, according to Bale J.: “If, on the date the application was made, the person was a spouse, then he or she will also have been a dependant on that date, and entitled to support, if the deceased was, in fact, providing support to him or her immediately before the date of death”.

Bale J. also found that the insurance money was caught by section 72 of the SLRA and therefore available to satisfy a dependant support claim. Bale J. noted: “If the Legislature had intended to except life insurance policies which are subject to an irrevocable designation under section 72, one would have expected the exception to have been made explicit.” Furthermore, the irrevocable designation was made pursuant to a temporary order, and the deceased had the right to argue on the final hearing (had there been one) that the designation was not required or need not continue. Bale J. ordered interim support, as well as a lump sum payment of $30,000.00 “maintain the litigation” and set a date for the hearing of the application to determine the amount of dependant support.

Dependant’s Support – PE – MacDonald Estate

When deciding on the quantity for adequate provision for a surviving spouse in MacDonald Estate, the Prince Edward Island Supreme Court turned to the intentions of the parties and an un-kept promise by the deceased to provide the applicant with the proceeds of a life insurance policy of $100,000.00. This case dealt with relief sought by a surviving spouse pursuant to the Dependents of a Deceased Person Relief Act, R.S.P.E.I. 1988, Cap. D-7.

The Estate acknowledged that the wife was a dependant, but argued that the Will provided adequate support for the wife. The Court disagreed and concluded that the testator had failed to provide adequately for his dependant widow. The Court looked to the “intentions of the parties” when deciding to award a lump sum of $100,000.00, in addition to paying out the car loan discussed above. It was undisputed that the deceased had told his wife he would leave her with proceeds of $100,000 from a life insurance policy, which failed to materialize. In order for the Estate to have funds to make the payments, the Court ordered that two properties owned by the Estate be sold.

In making its order the Court had the following useful observations about dependant support claims:

Assessing the testator’s moral obligations involves consideration of society’s reasonable expectations and contemporary standards. In the past two or three decades, second marriages have become commonplace. Often older adults are entering new relationships in which they maintain their financial independence. They frequently make arrangements for the bulk of their property to pass on their death to their children from their first relationship. That is a natural and completely understandable desire. However, the relationship of marriage, whether common law or otherwise, imposes new primary obligations which must be addressed in priority to other worthy, but still secondary, objectives. Society reasonably expects that a dependant person from a primary relationship, subject to the capacity of the estate, be supported to a reasonable extent from the available assets of the estate.”

Dependant’s Support – BC – Griese v. Syret

This case demonstrates how estate disputes can arise from a reluctance to openly refer to, or recognize, a relationship later in life as more than “friends” when it has the hallmarks of a loving, caring and supportive “spousal” relationship.

In Griese, a 54 year old widow, Ms. Jacques, commenced a common law relationship in 1980 and stayed in that relationship for 30 years, until her death in 2010. The deceased’s Will, which was executed in July 1995, left her “dining room suite” to her “friend” the plaintiff/common law spouse, Mr. Griese. She left the remainder of her estate which consisted of her half of the couple’s principal residence (held as tenants in common) to her nephew who she raised as a son. The plaintiff/spouse sought to vary the Will and brought an unjust enrichment claim based on his contributions to the residence.

130 MacDonald Estate 2014 PESC 7 at para. 49.
131 2013 BCSC 1601.
The plaintiff/spouse argued that he was entitled to a significant portion of the deceased’s estate and that his moral and legal claims ought to be recognized over and above the nephew/son’s claim. Interestingly, he also made the assertion that the deceased’s Will was “based on a lie” as the deceased “misrepresented the nature of their relationship by referring to him as a friend”. The nephew countered this argument by saying that this was not a lie, the spouse was her “friend” and she honestly represented that they were not married.

Justice Arnold-Bailey conducted an extensive review of the relevant and leading case law and the evidence (including that the spouses kept their finances separate, the nephew was an independent financially secure adult, the spouse provided significant comfort and care to the deceased etc.) and concluded that a dining-room set was not adequate provision for a spouse of over 30 years.

Justice Arnold-Bailey assessed the deceased’s legal obligation to have been “modest spousal support” but that her moral obligation “was significant”. Justice Arnold-Bailey also balanced this with the deceased’s moral obligation to her nephew/son. Justice Arnold-Bailey noted that had the deceased died intestate the nephew would not have qualified as “issue” under the Estate Administrations Act and the spouse would have inherited the entire Estate. Justice Arnold-Bailey ordered that the plaintiff/spouse receive a lump sum payment of $150,000 (of the approximate $375,000.00 Estate), with the remainder to go to the nephew and ordered the Estate to “equal amounts of the costs of each party”.

Joint Title – ON - *Hansen v. Hansen Estate

In Hansen, the husband’s daughters from a previous marriage claimed that title to the 132 2013 BCSC 1601 at para.52.

---

133 2013 BCSC 1601 at paras.72-72.
matrimonial home, which was held by the husband and wife jointly, was severed as a result of their mutual conduct following their separation. The Court agreed. The following mutual conduct supported this finding:

- the wife moved out of the home;
- the husband took over payment of the expenses and put the bills in his own name;
- the parties retained their own lawyers and agreed that they would exchange financial disclosure in order to carry out a division of their property;
- the wife proposed that the husband buy out her interest in the home or else it would need to be sold, and the husband took no issue with this proposal;
- the parties agreed that a quick resolution was in order;
- the husband made a new will naming his children rather than his wife as beneficiaries, and the home was his only significant asset; and
- the husband and wife closed joint bank accounts and opened new bank accounts in their own names.

A claim for severance of a joint tenancy is most likely to arise in complex family situations. Where spouses in a “simple” family separate, the passage of title by survivorship to the other spouse would often not work an injustice. Assuming that both parents have positive relationships with their children, the property may eventually pass to the children.

The situation in Hansen represents a potential missed opportunity to plan. Family lawyers in the circumstances of the separating spouses in Hansen in addition to advising that a Will be done, may want to consider advising their separated clients on entering into interim agreements to sever title to some or all jointly held property or register transfer of the property jointly to the parties as tenants in common.

It is also worth considering whether parties to marriage contracts and cohabitation agreements might want to include a provision automatically severing title upon breakdown of the relationship. However, despite the fact that this case could be said to have arisen out of the deceased’s failure to plan, the helpful reasons may have the effect of reducing future confusion and disputes over severance of joint title when spouses separate. The facts of this case are typical of a separation, and it is possible that severance based on the “third rule,” severance of joint title by a mutual course of conduct, will be the naturally expected outcome when parties initiate negotiations to divide their property after a separation, especially if they specifically address the disposition of a jointly held matrimonial home.

Joint Title – ON - Su v. Lam\textsuperscript{136}

Despite Hansen, it would be a mistake to see the severance of jointly held property as the automatic result of the breakdown of the relationship. The court has recently said that the mere fact of a separation is insufficient to establish severance.\textsuperscript{137} The totality of the evidence must be assessed. Indeed, on the totality of evidence in Su v. Lam, a case decided after Hansen, it was found that former spouses had not intended to sever their joint tenancy in certain pieces of rental real estate.\textsuperscript{138}

Joint Title – ON – Jones v. Jones

The case of Jones v. Jones\textsuperscript{139} is a notable one in which an older adult added her daughter as a joint tenant on the title to her property with the intention of the daughter holding it in trust for her benefit as she progressed into her old age. She did this even though the daughter paid nothing towards the purchase price. The daughter moved into her mother’s house shortly after it was purchased and her boyfriend moved in after a few years. Eventually the mother asked both of them to leave and they refused.

While the self-represented daughter agreed during the trial to a vesting order placing all legal and beneficial ownership of the house into the name of the mother alone and agreed to vacate the property, Justice Quigley stated he would have granted the relief in any event as the evidence supported a finding of resulting or constructive trust in favour of the mother (relying on Kerr v. Baranow, Peter v. Beblow and Pecore v. Pecore). Justice Quigley went on to consider the mother’s claims for repayment of significant amounts of money given to the daughter in the form of loans and advances, money taken form a joint line of credit without authorization, and imputed back rent for 10 years. Justice Quigley reviewed years of evidence in this regard and ordered that the daughter repay a total of just over $43,000.00 to her mother. This case acts as a warning to parents who see joint tenancy as a form of protecting their interests in old age. Parents must be sure of the character and trustworthiness of their off-spring, otherwise more cases similar to this one will be before the courts.

\textsuperscript{137} Jurevicius v. Jurevicius, 2011 ONSC 696 (Ont. S.C.J.)

\textsuperscript{138} Su v. Lam, supra note 136.

\textsuperscript{139} Jones v. Jones 2014 ONSC 787.

One of the issues in the British Columbia case of Pickard v. Knudsen was a dispute over jointly held bank accounts between the deceased and her children and whether the “right of survivorship” applied to those accounts. The deceased had two bank accounts: one joint with her adult son and one joint with her adult daughter. The son acknowledged that the funds in the bank account he held jointly with his mother should form part of the estate. He testified that he used the account from time to time to pay for expenses for his mother. The daughter, on the other hand, claimed that she should have the benefit of the balance of the joint account she had with her mother as it was a gift to her.

Referring to Pecore v. Pecore, the Court confirmed that there is a presumption of a resulting trust for joint accounts held between parents and adult children. A surviving joint account holder must prove on the balance of probabilities that the transferor intended to gift the assets in the joint account to the survivor. Absent such proof, the assets form part of the estate.

---

The daughter argued that as she was not aware that her name was on the account with her mother and because her mother never mentioned it to her, then it must have been meant as a gift. Justice Savage did not accept the daughter’s evidence that she did not know about the account, and in any event found this to be insufficient evidence to rebut the presumption and establish a gift.

This case provides insight into what may or may not be acceptable evidence to rebut the presumption set out in Pecore and that simply not knowing about the joint account is not enough to prove the money was a gift.

Joint Bank Accounts – ON - Sawdon Estate

In the Ontario case of Sawdon Estate, the deceased had seven bank accounts at various financial institutions that were jointly held, with a right of survivorship, with two of his five children. The funds in the accounts totalled just over $1 million. The father had some history and understanding of joint accounts when his wife passed away, and according to his lawyer, understood that when he transferred the bank accounts into “joint accounts with a right of survivorship” the funds would “be accessible to his two sons immediately upon his death”. At the same time he made the accounts joint, the deceased executed a new Will which divided his estate into five parts, for each of his five children and their issue. Should one of his children die without issue, that particular child’s share would go to the charity, Watch Tower Bible and Tract Society of Canada (the “Watch Tower”).

The deceased, despite understanding the “right of survivorship” of joint accounts, advised his sons that upon his death they were to divide the money in the joint accounts equally amongst their siblings. The sons agreed to and understood this request.

---

143 Sawdon Estate, 2012 ONSC 4042.
144 Sawdon Estate, 2012 ONSC 4042 at para. 23.
Subsequently the deceased revised his Will, whereby the Watch Tower would receive certain shares of his corporation “Sawdon Holdings” and the residue of his estate. Upon his death, his sons argued that the joint accounts were “gifted” to them and passed outside of his estate. The Watch Tower argued that the gift failed because the deceased did not gift the “beneficial interest” in the joint bank accounts and therefore the funds in the accounts formed part of the residue of the estate.

Justice Ricchetti applied Pecore and found that the sons successfully rebutted the presumption of resulting trust. The direct evidence showed that the deceased understood how joint accounts operated and specifically wanted the funds to pass to his children outside of his estate. His Honour also relied on the bank documents setting out that the accounts were subject to the right of survivorship, the tax treatment of the funds, and that there was no evidence of any reservation of interest by the deceased. The gift of the joint bank accounts was not a testamentary disposition as the gift was intended to be and was effective immediately upon opening of the joint bank accounts.

His Honour also went on to find that there was no intention by the deceased to retain a “beneficial” interest in the joint accounts as suggested by the Watch Tower. The beneficial interest in the joint bank accounts was transferred to all of the deceased's children. The deceased had no intention to reserve any beneficial interest for himself.

Ricchetti J., found the bank documents to be clear on their face and that the deceased's sons had control and use of the funds if they wanted. Ricchetti J., also opined that another way to approach the deceased's actions was that he made a gift of the legal and beneficial interest in the joint bank accounts to the two sons subject to them holding those monies upon receipt in trust for their siblings. In other words, that the sons were bare trustees for their siblings, when and if they received any monies from the joint bank accounts.\(^{145}\)

---

\(^{145}\) Sawdon Estate, 2012 ONSC 4042 at paras. 80-83.
On appeal, Justice Gillese, with Justices Hoy and Strathy agreeing, upheld the trial judge’s conclusion that all of the children were beneficially entitled to the funds in the bank accounts. However, Justice Gillese, on behalf of the Court, arrived at that conclusion using a different legal analysis.

Her Honour found that when the father transferred the bank accounts into joint names with his two sons he created a trust, and legal title vested immediately upon transfer. The sons became legal owners on the understanding that they were to divide the funds in the accounts equally amongst all of the children upon their father’s death. Therefore, Gillese J. held that “in legal terms, when the [b]ank [a]ccounts were opened [the father] made an immediate inter vivos gift of the beneficial right of survivorship to the [c]hildren. Thus, from the time that the [b]ank [a]ccounts were opened, those holding the legal title to the [b]ank [a]ccounts held the beneficial right of survivorship in trust for the [c]hildren in equal shares.”[emphasis added]147

Her Honour explained that this analysis differed from the trial judge’s in two significant respects.

Firstly, Her Honour disagreed with the trial judge’s suggestion that all of the children were beneficially entitled to the contents of the bank accounts from the time the accounts were opened. Instead, Gillese J. found that the children were entitled to the beneficial right of survivorship from the time the bank accounts were opened. There is a significant difference in these two findings, Gillese J. explained:

> The question of beneficial entitlement on [the father’s] death is a question of who owns the right of survivorship, whereas the question of beneficial ownership generally would encompass the period form the time that the [b]ank [a]ccounts were opened. . .[O]n the trial judge’s findings of fact, [the father’s] intention and instructions related only to the former, namely, beneficial entitlement upon death.148

---

Secondly, Gillese J.’s legal analysis differed from the trial judge’s in that the trial judge also founded the children’s entitlement on the alternative bases of gift or trust. The trial judge found that, alternatively, the father made a “gift” of the legal and beneficial interest to his two sons but they were to hold whatever funds they received from the bank accounts in trust for their siblings. Gillese J. held that “one cannot find that a gift of the beneficial right of survivorship has been made and, at the same time find that the recipient held it in trust for others. When the legal title holder of property is obliged to hold the property for the benefit of another, a trust has been created.”\(^{149}\) Basically, once the trial judge found that the two sons were obliged to hold the beneficial right of survivorship for all of the children in equal shares he found that a trust had been created, and therefore a gift analysis was no longer available.

Although Her Honour used a different legal analysis, Justice Gillese stated:

> I hasten to reiterate that the legal analysis I offer in no way detracts from the correctness of the trial judge’s conclusion that on [the father’s] death, the [c]hildren became entitled to the monies in the [b]ank [a]ccounts in equal shares. In my view, that conclusion is not only correct in light of the trial judge’s findings, it is inescapable.\(^{150}\)

Joint Bank Accounts – ON – Lowe Estate v. Lowe

Justice Reid introduced this dispute\(^{151}\) over a joint bank account by commenting that the funds in the bank account were “not large, and arguably not nearly enough to justify the time and expense of this litigation. However, as is often the case in estate litigation, the court process is the means by which a dysfunctional family has chosen to wage battle, and proportionality is a casualty of the early skirmishes.”\(^{152}\)

In his Will, the deceased appointed his wife as the sole executor and trustee, with his son as the alternate. The debts of his estate were to be paid and the wife was the residual beneficiary, with the residue to be divided equally between his two children should the wife predecease him.

---

\(^{151}\) 2014 ONSC 2436

\(^{152}\) Lowe Estate v. Lowe 2014 ONSC 2436 at para. 1

In 2008 after being diagnosed with pancreatic cancer, the deceased separated from his spouse and became estranged from his son. He relocated to Ontario and lived with his sister. He became close with his nephew. They visited regularly. In 2009 the deceased made his bank account joint with a right of survivorship with his nephew. At the same time, the deceased advised the nephew that upon his death he wanted a portion of the money in the joint account to be distributed to his alma mater university and to his granddaughter, with the rest to go to his son, and signed a note to this effect. The deceased stated that he did not trust his son to carry out these instructions and expressed that it was his understanding that the funds did not form part of his estate. Upon his uncle’s death, the nephew made the payments out of the joint account as requested, but held the payment to the son while the litigation was ongoing. The son argued that the joint account formed part of the Estate and all funds should have been distributed according to the will.

Justice Reid used the analysis in Sawdon Estate above, to conclude that in effect:

Lawton Lowe set up a trust with [his nephew] as the trustee when he added [his nephew] as legal title holder to the joint bank account. Lawton Lowe’s granddaughter, alma mater and son Garry were the beneficiaries. Ultimately, the combination of the banking documents, the written instructions, the prior use of joint banking for estate planning purposes, the confirmation that [the nephew] would see that ‘everything is paid’, and the lack of direct reliable evidence that the funds were to be treated as estate funds leads me to conclude that the respondent’s onus to rebut the presumption of resulting trust has been met.

A unique aspect of the joint account case, as noted by the Court, was the respondent nephew’s total lack of personal benefit, as he agreed he was to receive no money from the account. Justice Reid found that this also supported the evidence rebutting the presumption of resulting trust.

---

Joint Bank Accounts – MB - Sawchuk Estate v. Evans et al

In the Manitoba case of Sawchuk Estate v. Evans et al,\textsuperscript{154} at the time of her death, the deceased had all of her assets in joint bank accounts or joint investments with the youngest of her two adult daughters. After the mother died intestate, the youngest daughter claimed all of the joint accounts and investments through right of survivorship and advised her sister that their mother had left her nothing. The eldest daughter brought an application seeking a declaration that the assets held in the joint accounts were held on a resulting trust in favour of the mother’s estate and were to be distributed pursuant to Manitoba’s The Intestate Succession Act, C.C.S.M. c. I85.

Dewar J., reviewed the evidence presented, including testimony from the sisters, bank and investment documents, and testimony from the mother’s various caregivers. It was evident that the youngest daughter spent more time with the mother, caring for her, and assisting her after her stroke, and eventually lived with her mother.

Dewar J. concluded that the mother was dependent upon her youngest daughter to a degree and questioned whether the mother could have been unduly influenced to make her accounts joint. His Honour relied on the Supreme Court of Canada case of Goodman Estate v. Geffen\textsuperscript{155} and opined that “where there is a case that raises the spectre of a relationship in which the donee has the opportunity to influence the donor” then a presumption of undue influence arises.\textsuperscript{156} Then, Dewar J. observed, the onus is on the donee to rebut this presumption of undue influence. If that onus is not overcome, the gift automatically fails even without specifically addressing the presumption as articulated in Pecore that any joint accounts made between a parent and adult child are held in a resulting trust for the parent’s estate. If the presumption of undue influence is overcome, however, “then the court must also address the onus as articulated in Pecore.”\textsuperscript{157}

\textsuperscript{154} Sawchuk Estate v. Evans et al., 2012 MBQB 82 at paras. 29 and 34.
\textsuperscript{156} Sawchuk Estate v. Evans et al., 2012 MBQB 82 at para. 34.
Having determined the existence of a dependant relationship between the deceased and her youngest daughter, Dewar J., concluded that it was necessary to consider whether the presumption of undue influence had been rebutted. His Honour concluded that the youngest daughter could not rebut this presumption nor could she rebut the presumption that the joint accounts were held in a resulting trust as per Pecore. His Honour based his conclusion on the following evidence:

- the lack of the mother’s signature on some bank documents;
- the fact that the youngest daughter would sometimes sign her mother’s name on bank documents;
- the dependency of the mother on the youngest daughter for her care;
- the ill feelings the youngest daughter had against the eldest daughter;
- the fact that the youngest daughter was not financially well off; and
- the history of equal treatment by the parents towards both of their daughters.

Dewar J. also observed that:

I recognize that family members oftentimes deal informally with each other on monetary matters. However, I am of the view that where it is alleged that an elderly and partially disabled parent makes what amounts to a disposition of her estate and favours the child upon whom she is at least partially dependant to the exclusion of other children and especially where historically, equal treatment was exercised by the deceased, the court should require some rigour to the evidence which is adduced to try and rebut the presumption of undue influence as well as the presumption articulated in Pecore. Evidence from the donee and people close to the donee does not carry great weight in my opinion. It should be reviewed with suspicion.\(^\text{158}\)

Ultimately the Court concluded that all of the monies held in the joint accounts were held on a resulting trust and were to be repaid to the estate of the mother for distribution according to The Intestate Succession Act, subject to any other distribution which the parties might agree amongst themselves.

\(^{158}\) Sawchuk Estate v. Evans et al., 2012 MBQB 82 at para. 52.

Interestingly it appears that Dewar J. would have liked to have compensated the youngest daughter for the time and energy she spent assisting her mother, however felt that he could not make such a ruling. His Honour stated that he did “not believe that the law permits [him] to reduce the amount of repayment to compensate [the youngest daughter] for the care that she provided. Nothing stops the estate, however, with the consent of both beneficiaries, to vary the distribution prescribed by The Intestate Succession Act to take account of [the youngest daughter’s] care of her mother.”\textsuperscript{159}

\textbf{Pension Benefits – ON - Carrigan v. Quinn}

This Ontario Court of Appeal\textsuperscript{160} decision addressed the following question: who receives the pension death benefit when the member of a pension plan dies and is survived by both a common-law spouse and a legally married spouse from whom he was separated but who was also designated as a beneficiary of his pension plan?

Melodee and Ronald Carrigan were married in 1973 until his death in 2008. In 2002, Mr. Carrigan had designated Mrs. Carrigan and their daughters as the beneficiaries of the death benefit of his pension plan. The Carrigans separated in January 2000 when Mr. Carrigan began living with the respondent Jennifer Quinn. Mr. Carrigan continued to live with Ms. Quinn until his death.

The trial judge held that while both Mrs. Carrigan and Ms. Quinn met the statutory definition of spouse under section 48 of the Pension Benefits Act R.S.O. 1990 c.P. 8, (“\textit{PBA}”) there could only be one spouse for the purposes of the \textit{Act}. As Ms. Quinn was living with Mr. Carrigan at the time of his death, the trial judge held that Ms. Quinn was the spouse who was entitled to his death benefit. The trial judge also rejected Mrs. Carrigan’s second argument that she and her two daughters were entitled to the death benefit because they were the designated beneficiaries. The court held that they would only have received the benefit as beneficiaries when there is no eligible spouse. Mrs. Carrigan appealed.

\textsuperscript{159} Sawchuk Estate v. Evans et al, 2012 MBQB 82 at para. 57

The Court of Appeal allowed the appeal in a two-one decision written by Justice Juriansz (Justice Epstein concurred and Justice LaForme dissented). In reaching its decision, the Court completed a statutory interpretation of section 48 of the PBA, which provides that a “spouse” of a member of a pension plan on the date of death is entitled to the pension death benefit. However, section 48(3) provides that no payment will be made “where the member or former member and his or her spouse are living separate and apart on the date of death.”

The Court held that, assuming that both Mrs. Carrigan and Ms. Quinn met the statutory definition of “spouse,” s. 48(3) would apply in these circumstances since Mrs. Carrigan was “living separate and apart” from Mr. Carrigan at the date of death. Once s. 48(3) was triggered, s.48(1), which entitles a “spouse” to the death benefit, did not apply, full stop.

If s.48(1) was rendered inapplicable, Ms. Quinn would not be entitled to the death benefit, even though she was also a “spouse” as defined in the PBA and was not living “separate and apart” from Mr. Carrigan. The Court then went on to find that, as there was no spousal entitlement, Mr. Carrigan’s designated beneficiaries, Mrs. Carrigan and his daughters, were entitled to the death benefit under s.48(6) of the PBA.

In his dissenting reasons, however, Justice LaForme held that the Act does not stop a person from effectively having two spouses with equal rights of entitlement to the death benefit. He also held that the Act clearly favours whichever spouse (whether married or common-law) was living with the pension-holder on the date of death. He would have dismissed the appeal.

The Supreme Court of Canada denied leave to appeal. However, in 2014, amendments to section 48 of the PBA, made in response to this case, came into force. The amendments clarify that in circumstances where a pension plan member is legally married to a spouse from whom he or she is separated, is living with a new spouse in a common law conjugal relationship, and dies prior to retirement, the common law spouse will be entitled to the pre-retirement death benefit.161

Pension Benefits – ON - Vladescu v. CTV Globe Media Inc.

In Vladescu,162 the deceased was a member of a pension governed by the federal Pension Benefits Standards Act (“PBSA”). He entered into a separation agreement in 2003 in which it was acknowledged that the wife would continue to be the sole and exclusive person entitled to his pre-retirement death benefit until his death, and that he would not do anything to change this. Specifically, the husband was required to attempt to negotiate a domestic contract or release with any future spouse in order to recognize the wife’s rights under the separation agreement.

After determining that the PBSA allows for an assignment of a pre-retirement death benefit, the issue was whether the wording of the separation agreement successfully effected an assignment.

Section 24(4) of the PBSA provides that,

“a member or former member of a pension plan may assign all or part of their pension benefit, pension benefit credit or other benefit under the plan to their spouse, former spouse, common-law partner or former common-law partner, effective as of divorce, annulment, separation, or breakdown of the common-law

161 See the Building Opportunity and Securing Our Future (Budget Measures) Act, 2014 SO 2014 c 7, sched. 26 section 5(1).

162 2012 CarswellOnt 9252 (Ont. S.C.J.), aff’d 2013 ONCA 488, leave to appeal to SCC denied 2014 CarswellOnt 459 partnership, as the case may be…”

The Court held that the separation agreement was insufficiently clear to assign the pre-retirement death benefit to the former wife. Specifically, the paragraph of the separation agreement that required the husband to enter into a domestic contract with a subsequent spouse suggested that he had not assigned 100% of his interest away. The Court said that the subsequent spouse would have some right to the pension benefit if she did not give such release. This outcome was supported by the fact that the PBSA favours the interests of spouses who are cohabiting at the date of death.

Notably, the Court of Appeal upheld the lower court decision of Vladescu and the Supreme Court of Canada denied leave to appeal.163

The Court found against the two arguments put forth by the former wife: that the separation agreement assigned the deceased’s pre-retirement death benefit to her, and that, alternately, the separation agreement constituted an equitable assignment. The Court of Appeal agreed with the lower court that the separation agreement was insufficiently clear and therefore did not assign the benefit to the former wife. The Court also found that, despite the inclusion of an irrevocable direction as a schedule to the separation agreement authorizing the pension plan to pay all survivor benefits to the former wife, the documents failed to show that the deceased intended to assign the benefit.

Interestingly, the Court of Appeal stated that if the deceased had not remarried the separation agreement along with the irrevocable direction, worded as they were, would have sufficed to render the first wife a beneficiary to the benefit in question.

Both decisions appear harsh in that the deceased’s intentions and/or public policy were thwarted. In Carrigan, the deceased would have wanted to benefit his new spouse and the public policy of the Pension Benefit Act favoured spouses with automatic benefits. In

---

Vladescu, the deceased entered into a separation agreement that explicitly gave his former spouse his pre-retirement death benefit as part of a negotiated agreement.

What could the family lawyers and estate planners have done to protect their clients? In Carrigan, the husband or parties could have sought a divorce. Where married spouses separate, the divorce is no mere formality. It has a real, practical effect on the way that the deceased’s pension benefits and other assets will be distributed. A separation agreement may arguably, go some distance towards avoiding these problems, but the lesson from Vladescu is that where a separation agreement deals with the assignment, waiver, or other reorganization of statutory rights and instruments (federal and provincial pensions, RRSPs, life insurance, etc.), it must be drafted with deliberate and exacting care to ensure that they meet with the specific requirements of the legislation and interpretive case law.

Pension Benefits – ON - Stanton v. Coughlin & Associates Limited

In the case of Stanton v. Coughlin & Associates, the Court struck a claim by a spouse of a pension member seeking survivor benefits, for disclosing no reasonable cause of action.

The plaintiff and the deceased were married in 1974 and separated in 2000. They entered into a separation agreement in 2004 but like the facts in Carrigan, never divorced. The separation agreement provided that neither would be entitled to share or receive benefits of any kind from any pension plan of the other, except that the survivor may receive survivor benefits if a deceased has not remarried nor designated another beneficiary.

The deceased was a member of a pension plan administered by Coughlin & Associates. Under the plan, the deceased had designated the plaintiff as the beneficiary of his pre-retirement pension benefits up until his retirement in 2006. He had not designated a beneficiary for his post-retirement benefits.

---

164 2013 ONSC 7294.
In her Statement of Claim the plaintiff sought an order declaring that she was entitled to a survivor’s pension for life. The plaintiff also alleged that since the deceased had not remarried nor changed his beneficiary designation she was entitled to survivor benefits.

The defendants brought a motion to have the plaintiff’s Statement of Claim struck for disclosing no reasonable cause of action. They relied on section 44(4) of the Pension Benefits Act, R.S.O. 1990 c.P. 8 ("PBA") to argue that a claim that the plaintiff was an eligible spouse could not succeed. Sections 44(1) and (4) of the PBA state:

44(1) Every pension paid under a Pension Plan to a retired member who has a spouse on the date that the payment of the first instalment of the pension is due shall be a joint and survivor pension.

44(4) Subsection (1) to (3.1) do not apply, . . .(b) in respect of a retired member who is living separate and apart from his or her spouse on the date that payment of the first instalment of the pension is due.

The Court held that the plaintiff and the deceased were living separate and apart at the relevant time and accordingly section 44(1) was inapplicable to the plaintiff.

Pension Benefits – NS – MacEachen v. Minniken

This case from Nova Scotia\(^{165}\) examines a dispute between the second and third wives of the deceased over the enforcement of a clause in a separation agreement. The clause required the husband to have Wife #2 named as beneficiary under his pension until he remarried and if he did remarry, Wife #2 agreed to execute any and all necessary documents in order to release her as a beneficiary.

After the husband died, Wife #2 received his pension benefit as she was still named as his beneficiary even though he had remarried. Wife #3 brought a claim arguing that she was the rightful beneficiary as the separation agreement between the deceased and Wife #2, required Wife #2 to execute any and all documents in order to release herself as a beneficiary of the pension and to allow Wife #3 to become the beneficiary. As Wife #3 was not a party to the separation agreement, or the divorce, she brought a claim rooted in unjust enrichment seeking a remedy of constructive trust over the pension funds.

\(^{165}\) 2014 NSSC 47.

The Court found that the deceased had taken steps to change the beneficiary designation on his insurance policy but did not take any steps to change the beneficiary designation on his pension. The Court concluded that “he made no request to [Wife #2] that she execute the documents referred to in Clause 17 of the Separation Agreement”. The deceased was left in control of who would be designated as beneficiary of his pension once he remarried, despite the wording in the separation agreement. Changing the designation involved taking concrete steps. He did not take those steps. 166

The Court dismissed the unjust enrichment claim brought by Wife #3 as there was “no enrichment” (the third wife did not give anything to the second wife), “no corresponding deprivation” (there was no deprivation brought by the actions or inactions of the second wife) and there was juristic reason for the second wife to retain the benefit (she was the validly designated beneficiary).

Wife #3’s appeal was dismissed. 167 The Nova Scotia Court of Appeal cited the recent Supreme Court of Canada case of Sattva Capital Corp. v Creston Moly Corp. 168 which held that contract interpretation involved mixed fact and law and that the applicable standard of review was palpable and overriding error. The Nova Scotia Court of Appeal concluded that the trial judge made no such error in either his express or implied interpretation or application of the relevant clause in the separation agreement. The deceased was in control of his beneficiary designation and had over two years between his marriage to Wife #3 and his death to change it, and he didn’t. 169

166 2014 NSSC 47 at para. 35.
167 2015 NSCA 81.
168 2014 SCC 53.
169 2015 NSCA 81 43-44.
Beneficiary Designations – ON - Petch v. Kuivila

The testator’s Will in this case\(^{170}\) included a declaration making the woman he would later marry a beneficiary of his life insurance policy. However, their later marriage revoked the Will and, as a result, the life insurance beneficiary designation in her favour. A dispute arose between her and the deceased’s sister, who was the previous designated beneficiary on file with the insurance company.

The court was asked to decide as follows: a) whether the beneficiary designation reverted to the one filed with the insurance company; or b) whether there was no valid beneficiary designation having the effect of the insurance proceeds falling into the deceased’s estate.

The Court held that an insurance declaration made in a will in accordance with s. 171(1) of the Insurance Act, R.S.O. 1990, Chapter I.8\(^{171}\), is effective as of the date it is made. At the moment the Will is signed, the declaration permanently revokes any previous beneficiary designations. If the Will is later revoked by marriage, its declaration of beneficiary designation is also revoked. However, this does not change the fact that the declaration was valid and effective as of the time the Will was signed. Therefore, the result is that the deceased was left without any beneficiary designation at all and the insurance proceeds fell into his estate, as his wife had argued.

The backdrop of this case and the choice of the wife’s strategy are interesting. The wife could have elected under section 16(b) of the SLRA to take under the Will. That section provides that, where a Will is revoked by marriage, the married spouse can revive it by filing an election within one year of death. Had the wife done this, she would have received one-half of the life insurance proceeds (the deceased had named his son from a previous relationship as co-beneficiary with her in his will). By not so electing and by treating the Will as revoked, the wife successfully had 100% of the insurance proceeds become an asset of the estate, which presumably benefited her in her inheritance upon intestacy (the court did not discuss the assets of the estate). This was a risky yet \(^{170}\) 2012 CarswellOnt 13859 (SCJ).

---

\(^{171}\) Ontario Insurance Act, R.S.O. 1990, Chapter 1.8
arguably effective strategy.

Beneficiary Designations – AB - *Perry v. Perry

This Alberta case\(^{172}\) is just one instance of the common but harsh effect on a surviving subsequent spouse where a deceased who paid support secured by a life insurance policy fails to change the designated beneficiary once the spousal support terminates. The deceased had entered into a separation agreement with his wife that included a provision that he pay spousal support and obtain a policy of life insurance with the wife designated as irrevocable beneficiary. The husband obtained an order terminating spousal support, although the order was silent about life insurance. He never changed the policy’s beneficiary designation, but he continued to pay the premiums. The deceased remarried and some years later died intestate without having changed the beneficiary designation. His surviving spouse claimed that the $144,000 life insurance proceeds should be paid to the estate.

The Court considered three different grounds on which the courts have redirected the proceeds of a life insurance policy to a person other than the designated beneficiary: 1) the deceased may have revoked the beneficiary designation by taking the steps set out in the applicable insurance legislation; 2) the Court may rectify the beneficiary designation if there is clear evidence that it does not reflect the true intention of the insured; and 3) the Court may impress the insurance proceeds with a trust to give effect to an agreement or for other reasons.

In this case, none of the grounds were applicable. Although there were some general statements that the deceased wanted to change the beneficiary designation, these were not “clear and express” declarations to revoke the designation and identify the particular policy in question, both of which were necessary under the applicable section of the Insurance Act.\(^{173}\) Rectification was impossible because there was no evidence that the deceased formed a clear intention to change the beneficiary designation or that there was a clerical error in carrying out the intention. The proceeds were not impressed with a remedial trust because there was no agreement and no unjust enrichment: the releases in the separation agreement were too general to waive a right to the life insurance proceeds and the beneficiary designation itself was a juristic reason for the enrichment.

\(^{172}\) 2009 ABQB 687

\(^{173}\) R.S.A. 2000, c. I-5, s. 259.

In the result, the former spouse received a windfall and the surviving spouse was left empty-handed.

Beneficiary Designation – SK – Love v. Love

The Saskatchewan Court of Appeal, in *Love v. Love*¹⁷⁴ used equity and the doctrine of rectification to give effect to the true intentions of a deceased who improperly filled out a beneficiary change form.

The deceased married in 1976 and had four children with his wife. He was insured through his employment under a group insurance policy, with his wife as the beneficiary. The deceased and his wife divorced in 2006 and entered into a separation agreement, which purported to deal with all spousal support claims and property division issues. The agreement did not directly deal with the deceased’s insurance policy but stipulated that the wife surrendered all claims she may have against the deceased’s pension.

Following his divorce the deceased sent an email to his employer’s human resources manager stating that “due to his divorce” he “would like to change the beneficiary on [his] pension etc. (from [his] former wife to [his] son)”. The deceased filled out some portions of a group coverage change form but not all. While the section to change the beneficiary designation was left blank the deceased wrote “From Love, Lori M. (his wife) to Love, Thomas (his son)” under the section to be completed if the beneficiary had a legal name change. He did not sign the form. After he died in 2009, the partially completed unsigned form was found in his employee file at work.

¹⁷⁴ 2013 SKCA 31
Following the deceased’s death, both the wife and the son submitted a claim report, each stating they were the beneficiary of the life insurance proceeds. The Chambers Judge found that the wife had originally been properly designated as the beneficiary, the change of beneficiary form did not effect a change in beneficiary, the separation agreement did not change the beneficiary, the doctrine of unjust enrichment did not assist the son and the doctrine of rectification had no application.175

On appeal the Court reversed the trial judge’s reason by finding that the doctrine of rectification was applicable (dismissing the rest of the grounds of appeal). The Court observed that “there can be absolutely no doubt” that the deceased intended to change his beneficiary designation to his son: he thought he was filling out the form correctly, it was clear he was trying to advise that he was changing the beneficiary from his wife to his son, and he submitted the form to his work. The Court found that “he took all of the steps which, from his perspective, were necessary to give it full legal effect”.

The Court dealt with the lack of signature issue by finding that the handwriting on the form was authenticated as the deceased’s and both his employer and the insurance company were prepared to act on it notwithstanding that it was not signed. The Court ordered that the change form be amended to indicate that the beneficiary was the son and all insurance proceeds under the policy, along with accrued interest, were payable to the son.

Beneficiary Designation – BC – Wilson v. Wysoki

A case with similar facts but a different outcome is the case of Wilson v. Wysoki.176 In this case, the deceased committed suicide shortly after settling his divorce proceeding. The settlement was documented by a final order which dismissed any and all claims the wife had to any pension or pension benefits of the husband. After the husband’s death the wife discovered that she was still the named beneficiary for her ex-husband’s pension benefits and claimed entitlement to the proceeds. The executor of the estate sought a declaration that the wife was unjustly enriched and that she held the funds in trust for the estate.

---

175 2011 SKQB 176.

176 2014 BCSC 675

The wife testified that she had seen her ex-husband on three separate occasions after the divorce settlement and each time warned him to change his beneficiary designation. On the third occasion she testified that he said words to the effect “It’s all done, I’m happy with it” and he put his hands up to indicate he did not want to talk about it anymore. The evidence showed he did attend his employer’s office and signed a “Benefit Application and Change” form and changed the beneficiary from his ex-wife to his friend (and executor), but that form only related to the benefits available to him from his employer and not the union pension. The executor argued that the failure to change the pension beneficiary was an oversight and that the deceased’s true intention was that the executor should be entitled to those benefits, not his ex-wife. The deceased had removed his ex-wife as beneficiary under his employer benefits and his will specifically excluded his wife. Furthermore, the executor’s evidence showed that the deceased felt “bitter and angry” toward his ex-wife and “dreaded” seeing her.

Justice Bracken concluded that there was no unjust enrichment in this case:

Justice Bracken concluded that there was no unjust enrichment in this case:

Justice Bracken concluded that there was no unjust enrichment in this case:

Whether or not Mr. Wilson intended to make a change to the beneficiary under his pension, he did not do so prior to his death. The defendant remained the validly designated beneficiary and thus took the benefit by disposition of law. Following the analysis as set out in Kerr, that is the end of the matter. Although perhaps an unfortunate outcome, the plaintiff has failed to prove that the enrichment is “unjust” as defined in law. Therefore, the plaintiff’s claim must be dismissed.\textsuperscript{177}

\textsuperscript{177} 2014 BCSC 675 at para.44.
Proprietary Estoppel – ON - Cowderoy v. Sorkos Estate

Gus Sorkos had no children of his own.\(^{178}\) He considered his first spouse’s grandchildren to be his own and they considered him to be their grandfather. He promised them that if they worked to maintain his farm and cottage, whenever and however he asked, that he would leave these properties to them in his will. The evidence showed that the grandchildren carried out their end of the bargain: they were available whenever asked and carried out extensive work on the farm and cottage over the course of many years. They had also helped Gus with his business ventures. The Court found, for example, that one of the grandchildren had put in over 2000 hours of unpaid work to help Gus with one of his businesses.

In 2001, Gus’s wife, the grandmother of the grandchildren, died. In 2002, Gus remarried a woman he had known in his youth in Greece. His will had previously left the bulk of his estate to the grandchildren. However, after he remarried, he reduced the bequests to the grandchildren to token legacies.

Gus made representations and the grandchildren relied on them in ordering their lives to their detriment. Having received the benefit of his promises, the withdrawal of the benefit was considered by the court to be unconscionable. Quantum meruit would not adequately compensate the grandchildren. They were entitled to the farm and cottage properties on the basis of proprietary estoppel.

On appeal,\(^{179}\) the Ontario Court of Appeal received fresh evidence revealing that the transfer of the properties to the children would leave the estate without sufficient funds to fulfill a dependant support order that had been made. The Court of Appeal also agreed with the finding of proprietary estoppel by the trial judge, however, held that it was a promise to bequeath the properties upon death and not convey the properties. This meant the properties formed part of the estate and therefore could be subject to the dependant support claim. The Court ordered a new dependant support trial which was to take into account the value of the properties.\textsuperscript{180}

\(^{178}\) 2012 ONSC 1921

\(^{179}\) 2014 ONCA 618

The lessons from this case are simple to state and difficult to apply. Simply put, people will be held to their promises to make testamentary gifts, at least with respect to land (although compare gifts \textit{mortis causa} per statute), if the promises induce detrimental reliance and the promised gifts are unconscionably withdrawn.

From a planning perspective, individuals who have made these kinds of promises may think that they still have the discretion about whether to make good on them. When making a Will, they may not think to disclose the circumstances to their lawyer. Perhaps the simple question: “have you already told anyone that they can expect to get something from you when you die?” might elicit an answer that the estate planner could probe.\textsuperscript{181}

\textbf{Proprietary Estoppel – ON - \textit{Clarke v. Johnson}}

Although this case\textsuperscript{182} did not involve an estate dispute, it is another excellent example of the power of the equitable claim of proprietary estoppel in claims arising out of the breakdown of marriages.

In this case, Mr. Clarke and his wife built a cottage on an island owned by the wife’s family. The wife’s family advanced some of the funds to build the structure and eventually forgave the loan. The marriage came to an end in 1991 and the wife stopped using the cottage. Mr. Clarke, often with the children from their marriage, continued to use the cottage with the wife’s family’s permission. On an ongoing basis, Mr. Clarke paid for all of the maintenance and improvements to the property. Twenty years later, a dispute arose and the wife’s family issued a trespass notice to Mr. Clarke. He sued on the basis of proprietary estoppel and/or unjust enrichment and sought the continued \textsuperscript{180}2014 ONCA 618 at para. 59.

\textsuperscript{181}For a notable and recent BC case, see Sabey v. Von Hopffgarten Estate, 2013 BCSC 642.
\textsuperscript{182}2012 ONSC 4320
occupation of the property.

The court held that Mr. Clarke was successful on the basis of both unjust enrichment and proprietary estoppel. Mr. Clarke was instrumental in constructing the cottage and paid its expenses for twenty years. This enriched the wife’s family and, if he were forbidden from accessing the cottage, would amount to a corresponding deprivation to him, especially since he reasonably expected the use of it until he died. There was no juristic reason for the deprivation.

The court then relied on the three-part test for proprietary estoppel that the Ontario Court of Appeal set out in Schwark Estate v. Cutting.\(^{183}\) The court found that the wife’s family induced, encouraged or allowed Mr. Clarke to believe that he would enjoy the right to the property until he died. Mr. Clarke relied on this belief when he made significant contributions to the maintenance and improvement of the property. It would be unconscionable to allow the wife’s family vacant possession, which would give her the right to use it herself or rent it out.

This case will be especially helpful to parties who claim an interest in recreational property because of this rather romantic observation in the reasons:

> The attachment between a person and his or her camp is unique and not easily described. Over time there comes to be an emotional attachment borne of the surrounding beauty, the investment of sweat equity, and the memories of times spent with family and friends. When one has been allowed to develop that attachment over the course of decades, and has directed personal and financial resources to the property in the reasonable belief that it would continue, it is unconscionable to deny that benefit.

The court crafted an interesting remedy. It found that a monetary remedy would be inadequate given the link between the Mr. Clarke’s contribution and the property itself. It awarded Mr. Clarke a constructive trust over the property. However, this took the form of a personal licence to occupy the property for life on condition that it be kept in a state of good repair, that he pay all taxes and costs, and that he not materially alter the nature or quality of the property. After his death or the breach of the conditions, the property would revert to the wife’s family.

\(^{183}\) 2010 ONCA 61

Recently, the Ontario Court of Appeal dismissed an appeal of this matter and upheld the trial judge’s finding of proprietary estoppel and unjust enrichment.\textsuperscript{184} Justice Pepall, writing on behalf of the court, provided a helpful summary of the historical and modern approaches to proprietary estoppel.\textsuperscript{185} In commenting on the trial judge’s remedy, Justice Pepall had this to say:

He was mindful of the context of the case that unfolded before him over the course of a three-day trial and strove to accommodate the parties’ expectations. His choice of remedy represented the minimum equity to do justice in the circumstances. The respondent would not be entitled to the rights of an owner including the right to devolve the camp as part of his estate. Rather, consistent with expectations, he could regulate use during his lifetime or until he could no longer attend at the camp.\textsuperscript{186}

Proprietary Estoppel – BC - Scholz v Scholz

In this case,\textsuperscript{187} the appellant, Mrs. Scholz had built a coach house on the property of her son, Michael and daughter in law, Carolyn, at their invitation in 2001 as Mrs. Scholz was, at that time, recovering from hip surgery and requiring additional help. Mrs. Scholz paid approximately $94,000.00 to build the home and lived there until 2011.

In 2007, Michael and Carolyn bought another property where they planned to build a home. In 2011, Michael and Carolyn listed their home (with the coach house) for sale. They accepted an offer of approximately $3,000,000.00. Carolyn and Michael moved Mrs. Scholz’s belongings to a new apartment that they had arranged for her – albeit

\textsuperscript{184} Clarke v. Johnson, 2014 ONCA 237
\textsuperscript{185} Clarke v. Johnson, 2014 ONCA 237 at paras. 40-53
\textsuperscript{186} Clarke v. Johnson 2014 ONCA 237 at para. 81
\textsuperscript{187} 2013 BCCA 309
without her knowledge and while she was on vacation with her daughter.

Mrs. Scholz asked Carolyn and Michael for a share of the proceeds of sale of the house, in light of the fact that she had expended funds to build the coach house. Michael and Carolyn refused and Mrs. Scholz brought an action against them and filed a certificate of pending litigation on the property, on the basis that there had been an oral agreement that Mrs. Scholz would obtain an interest in the coach house and the land on which it was built. Mrs. Scholz also claimed resulting trust and constructive trust.

At trial, the judge dismissed Mrs. Scholz’s claims of resulting trust, constructive trust and proprietary estoppel.

Still, despite determining that there was no recourse to these equitable remedies, Justice Saunders turned to the decision of Lord Denning in Hardwick v. Johnson 188 and found that the facts supported a finding that there was a family relationship with an implicit legal agreement. That agreement would see Mrs. Scholz receive a “fair measure of compensation upon termination of her occupation of the Coach House. The most reasonable mechanism, and one which I find appropriate to impute to the parties, is that the value of the Coach House would be viewed by them as depreciating at a fixed rate on a declining balance, from year to year….” 189 Justice Saunders set the appropriate rate of depreciation at 10%, which would see Mrs. Scholz receiving from her initial input of $94,000.00, approximately $36,756.00.

On appeal, Neilson J.A. found no error on the issue of resulting trust in that there was no evidence that Mrs. Scholz had transferred property to Michael and Catherine, had not contributed to the purchase price of their property and had not intended to acquire an ownership interest in the house. As for the claim of constructive trust, Justice Neilson held that there was no error in Justice Saunders’s ruling, on the basis that

---

189 Scholz at paragraph 33
“there was no evidence the respondents had been unjustly enriched by the presence of the coach house on their property…”

On the proprietary estoppel claim, Neilson J.A. found again there was no error on Justice Saunders’s part. Justice Neilson made reference to the British Columbia Court of Appeal’s decision in Trethewey-Edge Dyking District v. Coniagas Ranches Ltd. Neilson J.A. summarizes a three-part test respecting proprietary estoppel from that case as follows:

..First, did the respondents as the owners of the legal right to the property do something to encourage the appellant to believe they did not intent to rely on their right? Second, has the appellant acted to her detriment because of that?
Third, would it be unconscionable for the respondents to go back on the assumption they have allowed the appellant to make?

On her review of the facts and the test, Neilson J.A. noted that the trial judge held that the case did not support a finding that there was a reasonable expectation that Mrs.
Scholz would share in the profits from the sale of the property in the future.

Furthermore, Justice Neilson concluded that Mrs. Scholz benefited from the living arrangement (by not paying for rent or utilities, and by receiving other support from the couple) such that any claim of detrimental reliance could not be made out. Neilson J.A.
also noted that any claim that Mrs. Scholz would have made other living arrangements if she had known she was not to receive a share of the future sale price, was not supported by evidence on the record. And so, the Court of Appeal upheld the trial judge’s finding that proprietary estoppel does not apply in this case.

The Court of Appeal was then asked to consider whether the rate of 10% depreciation

190 Scholz at paragraph 27
191 2003 BCCA.197 (CanLII) [hereinafter Trethewey]
192 Scholz at para. 31.
was in error. Justice Neilson held that the characterization of a “legal relationship on a family relationship” was appropriate and that the decision was a proper exercise of judicial discretion in the interest of fairness. The Court of Appeal therefore deferred to the trial judge on this count as well, and declined to alter the rate of depreciation.

Predatory Marriage – ON – Juzumas v. Baron

A “predatory marriage” case\textsuperscript{193} worth reviewing is the case of Juzumas v. Baron. The facts of this case have all the hallmarks of a predatory marriage: Mr. Juzumas is an older adult who comes into contact with an individual who, under the guise of “caretaking”, takes steps to fulfill more of the latter part of that verb. The result: an older person is left in a more vulnerable position than that in which they were found.

Mr. Juzumas, was 89 years old at the time the reported events took place, and of Lithuanian descent, with limited English skills. His neighbor described him as having been a mostly independent widow prior to meeting the defendant, a woman of 65 years. Once a “lovely and cheerful” gentleman, the plaintiff was later described as being downcast and “downtrodden” after the defendant infiltrated the plaintiff’s life.

The defendant “befriended” the respondent in 2006. She visited him at his home, suggested that she provide assistance with housekeeping, and eventually increased her visits to 2-3 times a week. She did this despite the plaintiff’s initial reluctance. The defendant was aware that the plaintiff lived in fear that he would be forced to move away from his home into a facility. She offered to provide him with services to ensure that he would not need to move to a nursing home. He provided her with a monthly salary in exchange.

The defendant ultimately convinced the plaintiff to marry her under the guise that she would thereby be eligible for a widow’s pension following his death, and for no other reason related to his money or property. She promised to live in the home after they were married and to take better care of him. Most importantly, she undertook not to send him to a nursing home as he so feared. The plaintiff agreed.

\textsuperscript{193} 2012 ONSC 7220

The defendant testified that the plaintiff had suggested that they marry on the basis of their mutual feelings of affection, romance, and sexual interest. Justice Lang found otherwise.

The defendant, who had been married approximately 6-8 times (she could not remember the exact number), had previous “caretaking” experience: prior and concurrent to meeting the plaintiff, the defendant had been caring for an older man who lived in her building. She had expected to inherit something from this man in addition to the pay she received for her services and was left feeling sour as she had not. Justice Lang considered this evidence as an indicator that the defendant was sophisticated in her knowledge of testamentary dispositions, and that she knew that an expectation of being named as a beneficiary to someone’s Will on the basis that she provided that person with care is unenforceable.

The day before their wedding, the soon-to-be newlyweds visited a lawyer who executed a Will in contemplation of their marriage. In spite of the obvious age gap and impending marriage, the lawyer did not discuss the value of the plaintiff’s house ($600,000) or the possibility of a marriage contract. Interestingly, the lawyer did not meet with the plaintiff without the defendant being present.

After the wedding ceremony, which took place at the defendant’s apartment, she dropped him off at a subway stop so that he would take public transit home alone. The defendant continued to care for the plaintiff several hours a week and to receive a monthly sum of money from him.

Despite the defendant’s promise that she would provide better care to the plaintiff if they married, the plaintiff’s tenant and neighbor, who were both found to be credible, attested that the relationship degenerated progressively. The tenant described the defendant, who had introduced herself as the plaintiff’s niece, as “‘abusive’, ‘controlling’ and ‘domineering’.”

With the help of a plan devised over the course of the defendant’s consultation with the lawyer who had drafted the plaintiff’s Will made in contemplation of marriage, the defendant’s son drafted an agreement which transferred the plaintiff’s home to himself. The “agreement” acknowledged that the plaintiff did not want to be admitted to a nursing home. Justice Lang found that even if it had been shown to him, the plaintiff’s English skills would not have sufficed to enable him to understand the terms of the agreement, and that the agreement did not make it clear that it entailed a transfer of the plaintiff’s home.

The plaintiff, the defendant and her son attended the lawyer’s office in order to sign the agreement respecting the transfer of the plaintiff’s property. Justice Lang found that the lawyer was aware of the plaintiff’s limited English skills; that overall his evidence indicated that it had not been explained to the client with sufficient discussion, or understanding the consequences of the transfer of property and moreover, that he was in the court’s words “virtually eviscerating the Will he had executed only one month earlier…”; that he did not meet with the plaintiff alone; and only met with the parties for a brief time. Additionally, Justice Lang found that the agreement signed by the plaintiff was fundamentally different from the agreement he had been shown by the defendant and her son at the plaintiff’s home.

Perhaps most importantly, Justice Lang found that the lawyer did not appreciate the power imbalance between the parties. In fact, it seems the lawyer was under the impression that the defendant, and not the plaintiff, was the vulnerable party.

The lawyer’s notes indicated that the plaintiff was “cooperative” during the meeting. Justice Lang interpreted the lawyer’s use of this word as indicating that the plaintiff was “acceding to someone else’s direction,” and not a willful and active participant to the transaction. In addition, Justice Lang found that the plaintiff had been under the influence of emotional exhaustion or over-medication at the time the meeting took place. The judge found, based on testimonial evidence that this may have been because the defendant may have been drugging his food as suspected by the plaintiff.

Sometime after the meeting, the plaintiff's neighbor explained the lawyer's reporting letter to him, and its effect in respect of his property. With his neighbor's assistance, the plaintiff attempted to reverse the transfer by visiting the lawyer at his office on three separate occasions. Interestingly, when he would visit, a few minutes after his arrival, his “wife” would appear. The lawyer explained to the plaintiff that the transfer could not be reversed because it was “in the computer.”

In considering the transfer of property, Justice Lang applied and cited McCamus' “Law of Contracts”, which outlines a “cluster of remedies” that may be used “where a stronger party takes advantage of a weaker party in the course of inducing the weaker party’s consent to an agreement.” Justice Lang outlined the applicable legal doctrines of undue influence and unconscionability, stating: “if any of these doctrines applies, the weaker party has the option of rescinding the agreement.”

Justice Lang found that a presumption of undue influence existed between the parties in this case as the relationship in question involved an older person and his caretaker. The relationship was clearly not one of equals. In such a case, the court noted that the defendant must rebut that evidence by showing that the transaction in question was an exercise of independent free-will, which can be demonstrated by evidence of independent legal advice or some other opportunity given to the vulnerable party which allows him or her to provide “a fully-informed and considered consent to the proposed transaction.”

As for the doctrine of unconscionability, Justice Lang stated that the doctrine “gives a court the jurisdiction to set aside an agreement resulting from an inequality of bargaining power.” The onus is on the defendant to establish the fairness of the transaction. These presumptions were not rebutted by the defendant in this case.
The defendant also made a claim of quantum meruit for services rendered. Justice Lang denied this claim as before the marriage the defendant undertook the care without an expectation or promise of remuneration and no remuneration was warranted. While Justice Lang found that the defendant had an expectation that she would be remunerated by the plaintiff for care post-marriage, and that the plaintiff had agreed to do so, Justice Lang denied the defendant’s claim. Justice Lang relied on the equitable principle that restitutionary relief allows a court to “refuse full restitution or to relieve [a party] from full liability where to refrain from doing so would, in all the circumstances, be inequitable.” In considering this principle, Justice Lang found that the defendant had “unclean hands” and that “the magnitude of her reprehensible behaviour is such that it taints the entire relationship.” Substantial costs were awarded in favour of the older adult plaintiff.

This case provides helpful guidance in the use of both contract law and equity to remedy the wrongs associated with predatory marriages. Also of note in this case, it is not a family member or acquaintance who brought the case before a court after the vulnerable adult’s assets had already been depleted, but rather, the older adult himself who, with the help of his neighbor, was able to seek justice and reverse some of the defendant’s wrongdoing. This case also demonstrates the usefulness of presenting the testimony of an older adult when it is possible and appropriate.

Predatory Marriage – NY – In the Matter of Berk

Other jurisdictions have seen an increase in these predatory marriage cases as well. The New York case of In the Matter of Berk[^104^] looked at whether a spouse has a right to his or her elected statutory share of a deceased spouse’s estate even if the marriage was the result of fraud, undue influence or the incapacity of one of the parties.

[^104^]: 2008 NY Slip Op 28247 [20 Misc 3d 691]
The facts are very similar to that of Juzumas, where a caretaker convinced a vulnerable older adult, who was dependant upon her, to marry her. The caretaker (who was abusive and domineering) kept the marriage a secret from the older adult's children (from a previous marriage) until the older adult died and she brought an application seeking her elected share of his estate, as she was left nothing in his will. A motion court granted her summary judgment motion declaring that as she was a spouse she was entitled to her elected share as a “right”. The Court of Appeal however found that the summary judgment motion should not have been granted as there was a triable issue: “did the caregiver forfeit her statutory right of election?”:

In opposing the petitioner's motion for summary judgment on the petition, the decedent’s sons tendered evidence from which a trier of fact could properly determine that the petitioner, ‘knowing that a mentally incapacitated person [was] incapable of consenting to a marriage, deliberately [took] unfair advantage of the incapacity by marrying that person for the purpose of obtaining pecuniary benefits that become available by virtue of being that person’s spouse, at the expense of that person’s intended beneficiaries.’ (Campbell v. Thomas A.D. 3d 897 N.Y.S. 2d 460) Should the trier of fact so determine, equity will intervene to prevent the petitioner from becoming unjustly enriched from her wrong doing as a court cannot allow itself to become an instrument of wrongdoing.”

This case, and the similar case of Campbell v. Thomas195 which the New York Court released concurrently, raise the possibility of other remedies for predatory marriages in Canada, including possibly the defence of ex turpi causa non oritur actio (no right of action arises from a base cause). This maxim acts as a defence to bar a plaintiff’s claim where the plaintiff seeks to profit from acts that are “anti-social” [Hardy v. Motor Insurer’s Bureau (1964) 2 All E.R. 742];or “illegal, wrongful or of culpable immorality” [Hall v. Hebert 1993 2 S.C.R. 159] in both contract and tort. In other words, a court will not assist a wrongdoer to recover profits from the wrongdoing. Arguably, the unscrupulous, should not be entitled to financial gain arising from the “anti-social” or “immoral” act of a predatory marriage.

195 Campbell v. Thomas A.D. 3d 897 N.Y.S. 2d 460
Predatory Marriage – BC - Ross-Scott v. Potvin

Ross-Scott v. Potvin\(^{196}\) illustrates the difficulties of attacking the validity of a marriage after the death of the vulnerable adult. The only surviving relatives of the deceased, Mr. Groves, sought an order annulling Mr. Groves’s marriage on grounds of undue influence or, in the alternative, lack of capacity. They also argued that various inter vivos transfers and testamentary instruments were invalid on the same grounds. Justice Armstrong applied the common law standard for capacity to marry and ultimately dismissed all of the claims, despite compelling medical evidence of diminished capacity and vulnerability.

Mr. Groves was a 77 year-old retired civil engineer when he married the Respondent, Ms. Potvin, who was then 56 years old. They were neighbors. Mr. Groves was reclusive and did not socialize; he met Ms. Potvin in 2006 when he delivered a piece of her mail that he had received by mistake. They married in November of 2009. Mr. Groves died a year later, in November of 2010.

The applicants are his niece and nephew, and his only living relatives. They lived abroad and had not seen the deceased for 25 years.

In 2007, shortly after he had met Ms. Potvin, Mr. Groves instructed a solicitor to prepare a will which named one of the applicants, Nigel Scott-Ross, as the executor and trustee of his estate. The proposed will split the estate equally between Nigel and his sister and co-applicant. Mr. Groves contacted that solicitor 4 months later and said that he wanted to leave the will for about six months.

In June of 2008, Mr. Groves contacted a new solicitor, instructed the new solicitor to prepare a new will and executed the will in the same month. The will included provisions that granted his car, space heater, and rugs to Ms. Potvin, and divided the rest of his estate between the applicants and two charities.

\(^{196}\) 2014 BCSC 435
Four months later, in October of 2008, Mr. Groves retained his third solicitor, Mr. Holland, and executed another will which named Ms. Potvin as his executor and trustee, and divided the estate between the applicants, Ms. Potvin, and one charity. In July of 2009, Mr. Groves executed yet another will that divided his estate in two equal shares; one share for Ms. Potvin and one for the applicants.

By September of 2009, Mr. Groves’s health problems, which had first presented themselves to his doctor in 2007, had grown more serious.

In November of 2009, Mr. Groves and Ms. Potvin were married. They made no announcements or public notice, and they took no pictures. Mr. Groves then put his car in Ms. Potvin’s name, converted his bank accounts to joint accounts with her, and gave her $6,000 to assist her with her mortgage.

When Mr. Holland learned of the marriage a few months later, he called Mr. Groves and informed him of the impact of the marriage on Mr. Groves’s will. Mr. Groves executed a new will that gave the applicants $10,000 each and left the rest of his estate to Ms. Potvin.

Mr. Groves died in November of 2010.

Justice Armstrong’s analysis of the capacity to marry relies primarily on the case of A.B. v C.D, 2009 BCCA 200, and in particular, the importance of autonomy therein. The medical evidence established that Mr. Groves suffered from cognitive impairments, anxiety, depression, and moments of delusional thinking. Mr. Groves’s family doctor asserted that Mr. Groves was incapable of “managing himself” in November of 2009. Nevertheless, Justice Armstrong found that these conditions, diagnoses, and limitations did not evidence an inability on Mr. Groves’s part to make an informed decision to marry Ms. Potvin. His Honour provides the following observation:

A person may be incapable of writing a cheque or making a deposit to a bank account and thus be described as being incapable of managing their financial affairs. Similarly, temporal delusions, depression, or anxiety may impact a person’s ability to make other life decisions. But these factors do not necessarily impact a person’s ability to consciously consider the importance of a marriage contract. Nor do they necessarily impact formation of an intention to marry, a decision to marry, or the ability to proceed through a marriage ceremony.

Mr. Holland, as well as Mr. Groves’s accountant, financial advisor and marriage commissioner all gave evidence affirming that Mr. Groves was aware of the nature of the marriage. Of particular assistance was Mr. Holland’s evidence; Mr. Holland was concerned about the appearance of elder abuse and he questioned Mr. Groves in detail about his relationship with Ms. Potvin a few weeks prior to the marriage. Mr. Groves was consistent in his assertions that he wanted to marry.

With respect to undue influence, the applicants relied on Feng v. Sung Estate, 2003 CanLII 2420 (ONSC). The evidence established that Mr. Groves was afraid of being admitted into care and believed that he could avoid that end by marrying Ms. Potvin, who would assist him with asserting his autonomy and maintaining his comfort and care at home. His family doctor asserted that Mr. Groves was susceptible to persuasion in 2009.

Regardless, Justice Armstrong found that there was no direct evidence that Ms. Potvin’s influence over Mr. Groves supplanted his decision making power on the issue of his decision to marry. His Honour found that Ms. Potvin may have encouraged Mr. Groves in this regard, but there was no evidence that she exerted influence or force to compel him to do so. His Honour explains his holding as follows:

I have concluded that the burden of proof regarding a challenge to a marriage based on a claim of undue influence is the same as the burden of proving a lack of capacity. The plaintiffs must provide the defendant’s actual influence deprived Mr. Groves of the free will to marry or refuse to marry Ms. Potvin. The plaintiffs have failed to meet the burden of proving that Mr. Groves was not able to assert his own will.

Justice Armstrong also dismissed the claims that Mr. Grover’s testamentary dispositions and inter vivos transfers were invalid by reason of undue influence. His Honour applied Hyrniak v. Maudlin, 2014 SCC 7 and concluded that a summary trial, with a record of affidavit evidence and cross-examination transcripts, was a suitable forum for the disposition of the claim. The action was dismissed with costs to Ms. Potvin.

IV. CHECKLIST

Although this is not by any means intended to be an exhaustive list, the following checklist incorporates certain conclusions that can be drawn from the law evolving out of litigation involving re-marriages, re-partnerships, common-law relationships and complex families:

• It is important to consider the complete family dynamics relationship and history when naming estate trustees, if possible avoiding the appointment of a new spouses or children of a former relationship where there will be a temptation for the estate trustee to not act neutrally.

• It is necessary to identify all people who may make a claim under the applicable dependant’s support legislation and to advise the client on the adequacy of the provision in a proposed will and disposition of other assets based on the most up-to-date trends in the cases. This includes determining if the client had any former common-law spouses, especially relationships that ended without the involvement of lawyers.

• It is necessary to find out whether the client has induced anyone to detrimentally rely on his or her promise to give an interest in property.

• An estate-planning lawyer ought to determine what legislation might be operative upon death and whether the deceased and his or her partners are spouses for purposes of the different definitions of “spouse” in family law, succession law, pension, tax, banking, and other legislation. At common-law, a person is not limited to having only one spouse at a time.
• It is important for separated spouses to obtain a divorce, especially where the spouse has a pension governed by the Pension Benefits Act, or plan around this issue. Also consider which legislation applies provincial, or federal.

• The existence and status of children is not always obvious. A child estranged for many years may not be mentioned. There might be doubt about whether a child or their issue are biologically related or adopted, which could cause unexpected results or litigation over the issue. Special care ought to be taken to identify all intended beneficiaries by name rather than class as far as possible and to probe the existence and lineage of children and other issue.

• It is important to obtain copies of all domestic agreements, including cohabitation agreements, marriage contracts (pre-nuptial and post-nuptial agreements), and separation agreements. It is equally crucial to get copies of any support orders, support variation orders, and support termination orders, including orders to secure support with life insurance or other vehicles.

• It is important to identify all insurance policies, RRSPs and other similar vehicles with beneficiary designations. It is not always sufficient to revoke and make new beneficiary designation in a Will because the revocation may be ineffective where a designation was made irrevocable.

• In jurisdictions where a surviving spouse can make a claim for a division of matrimonial property from the deceased spouse’s estate, the estate planner might need to roughly calculate the potential outcome of a property division between the spouses, including an assessment of the various exclusions, marriage date deductions, and identification of difficult valuation issues (e.g. interests in private businesses) to determine if the estate plan will be sidetracked by a spouse’s election.
• Family lawyers have a major role to play in estate planning. Their separating clients may have outdated Wills, property held in joint tenancy that should be severed, and non-traditional assets (RRSPs, insurance policies, pensions) that need special care to ensure they fall into the right hands on death. Their pre-nuptial clients may, among other arrangements of their affairs on death, consider whether to make any provision for severing joint title or confirming the right of survivorship in property held in joint tenancy on death.

• It is important to consider, if the client is in a common-law relationship, whether the client and his or her spouse are engaged in a joint family venture with the potential for an unjust enrichment claim, or other equitable claim, against the estate.

• Time is of the essence, gauging urgency in death bed circumstances.¹⁹⁷

Links to further resources which may be of assistance, are contained on our website:

• Undue Influence Checklist

• Duties of an Attorney Under Power of Attorney For Property

¹⁹⁷ Morassut v. Jaczynski Estate, 2013 ONSC 2856
• Duties of an Attorney Under Power of Attorney for Personal Care

• Capacity Checklist Re: Estate Planning Context

• Summary of Capacity Criteria

• Attorney/Guardian /Client Memorandum Re: Personal Care

• Attorney/Guardian/Client Memorandum Re: Property

This paper is intended for the purposes of providing information only and is to be used only for the purposes of guidance. This paper is not intended to be relied upon as the giving of legal advice and does not purport to be exhaustive.

Kimberly A. Whaley, Whaley Estate Litigation
November 2015